SHADES OF BLUE
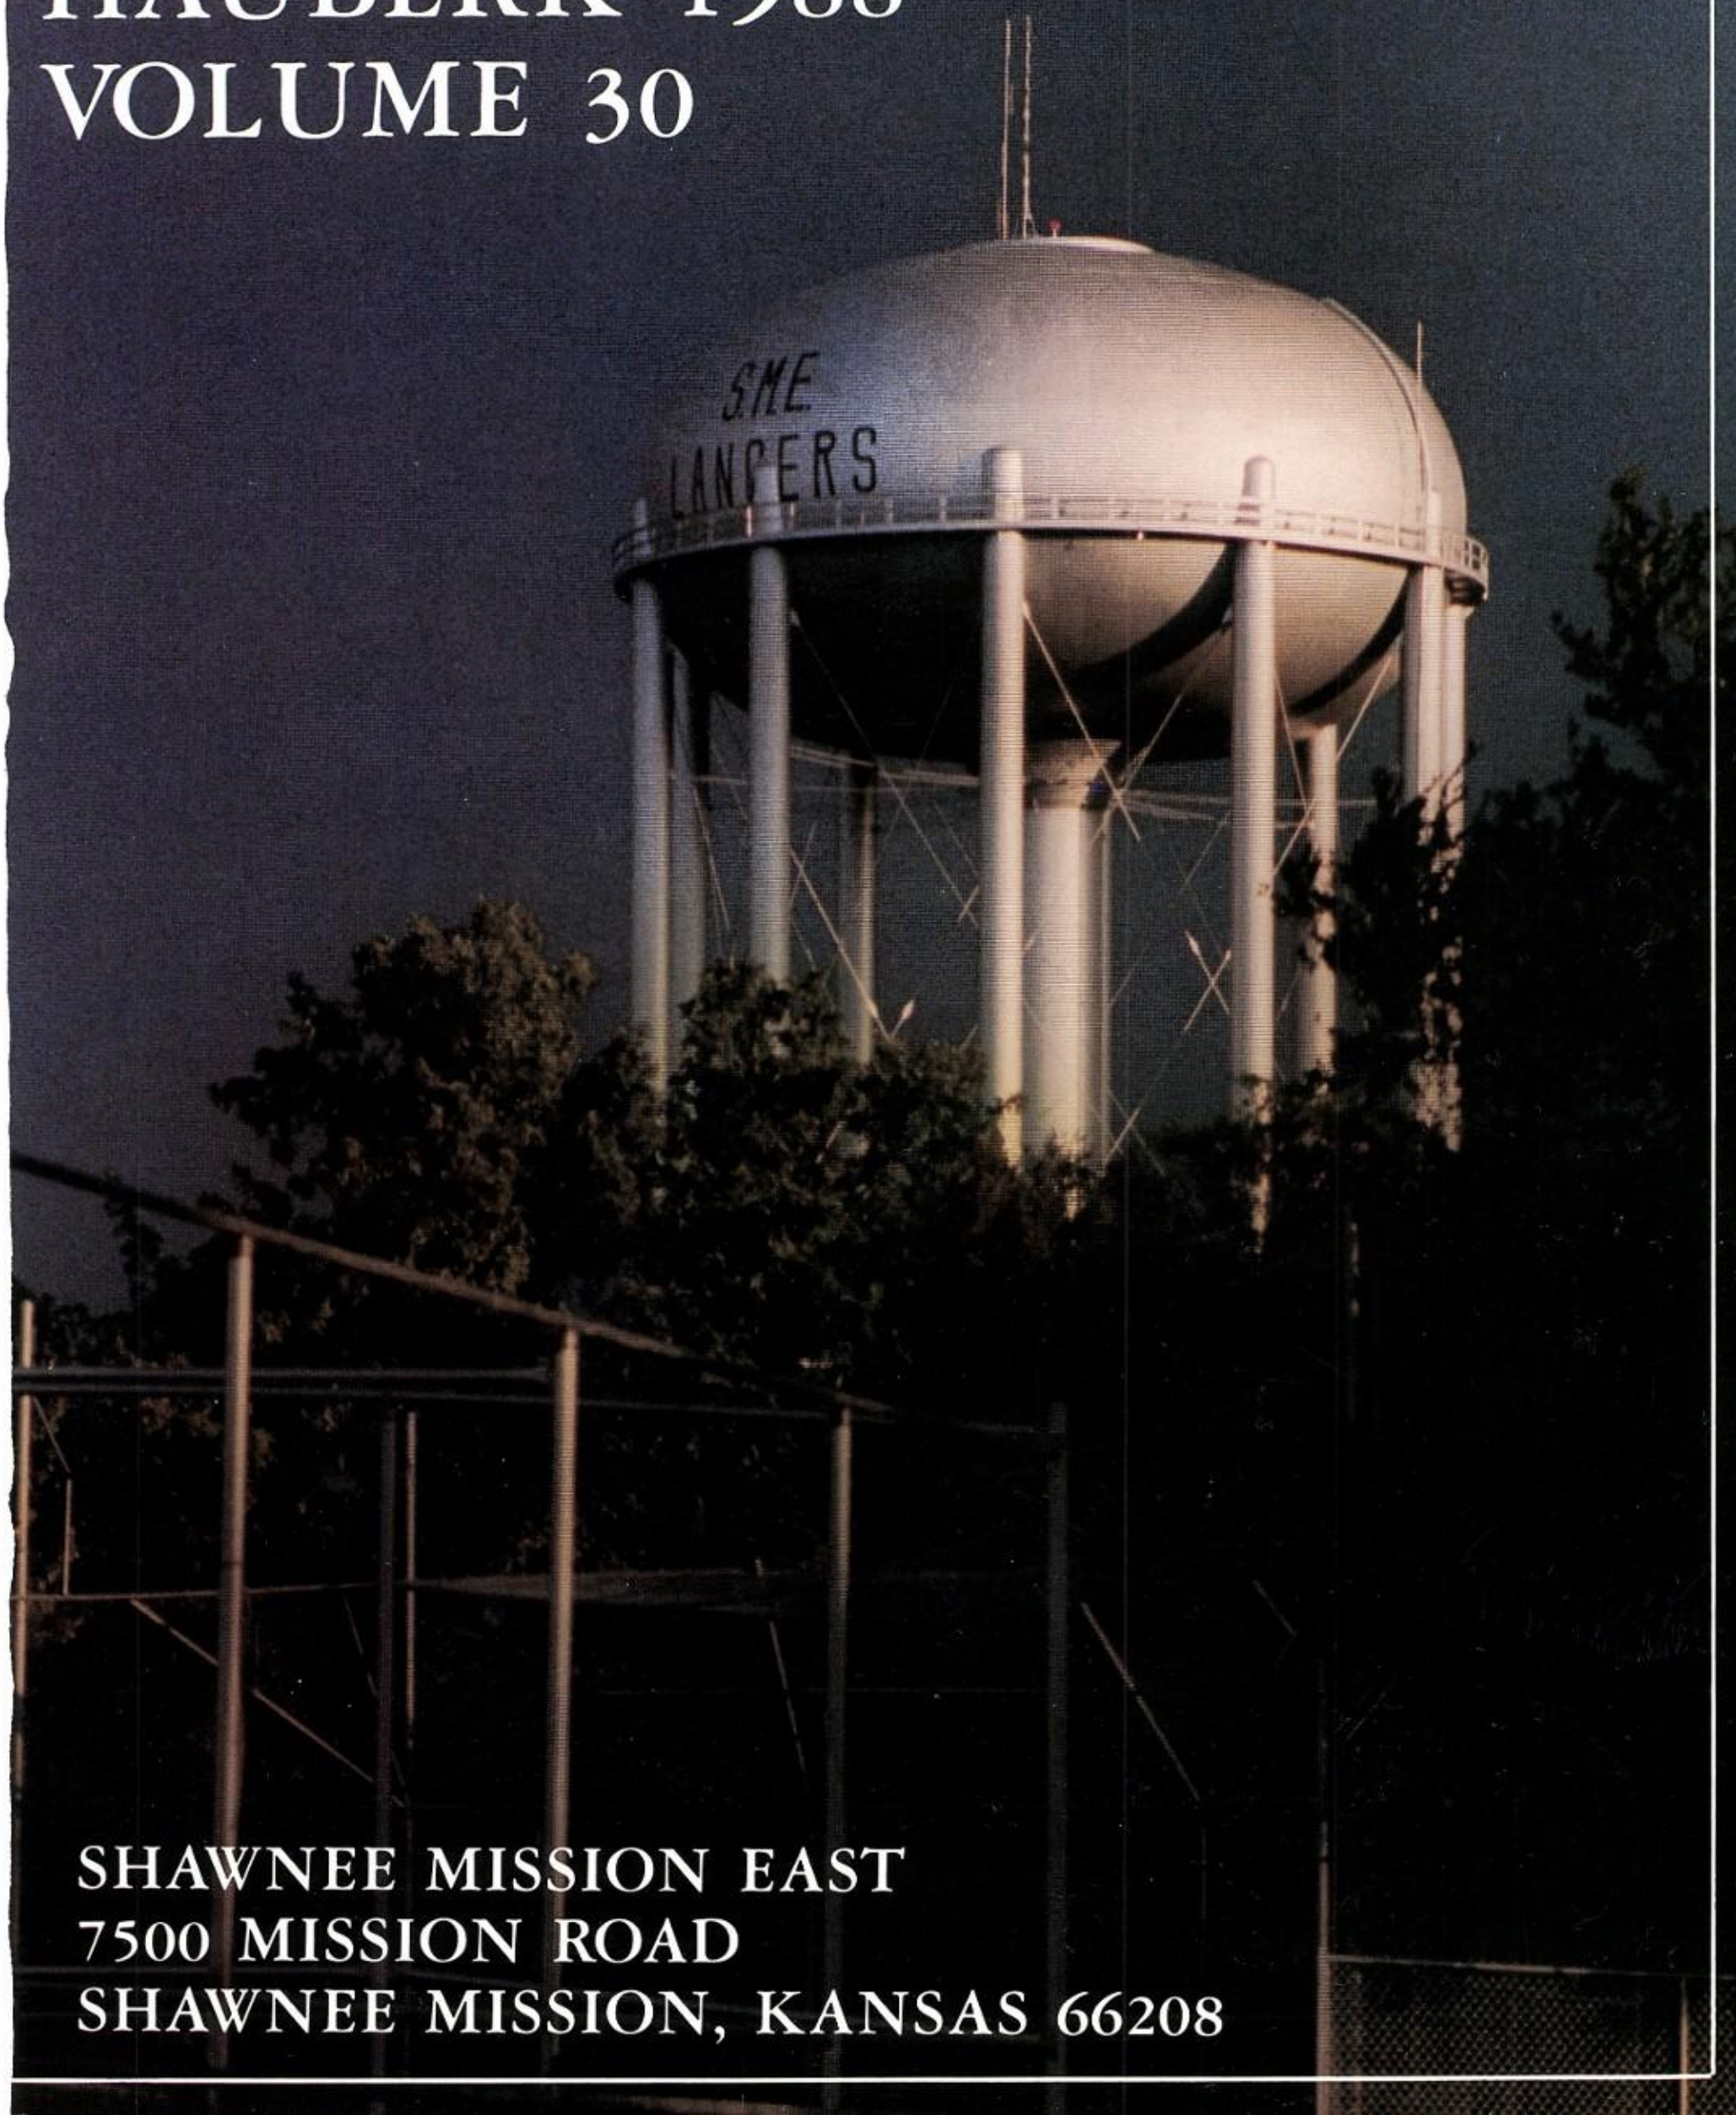
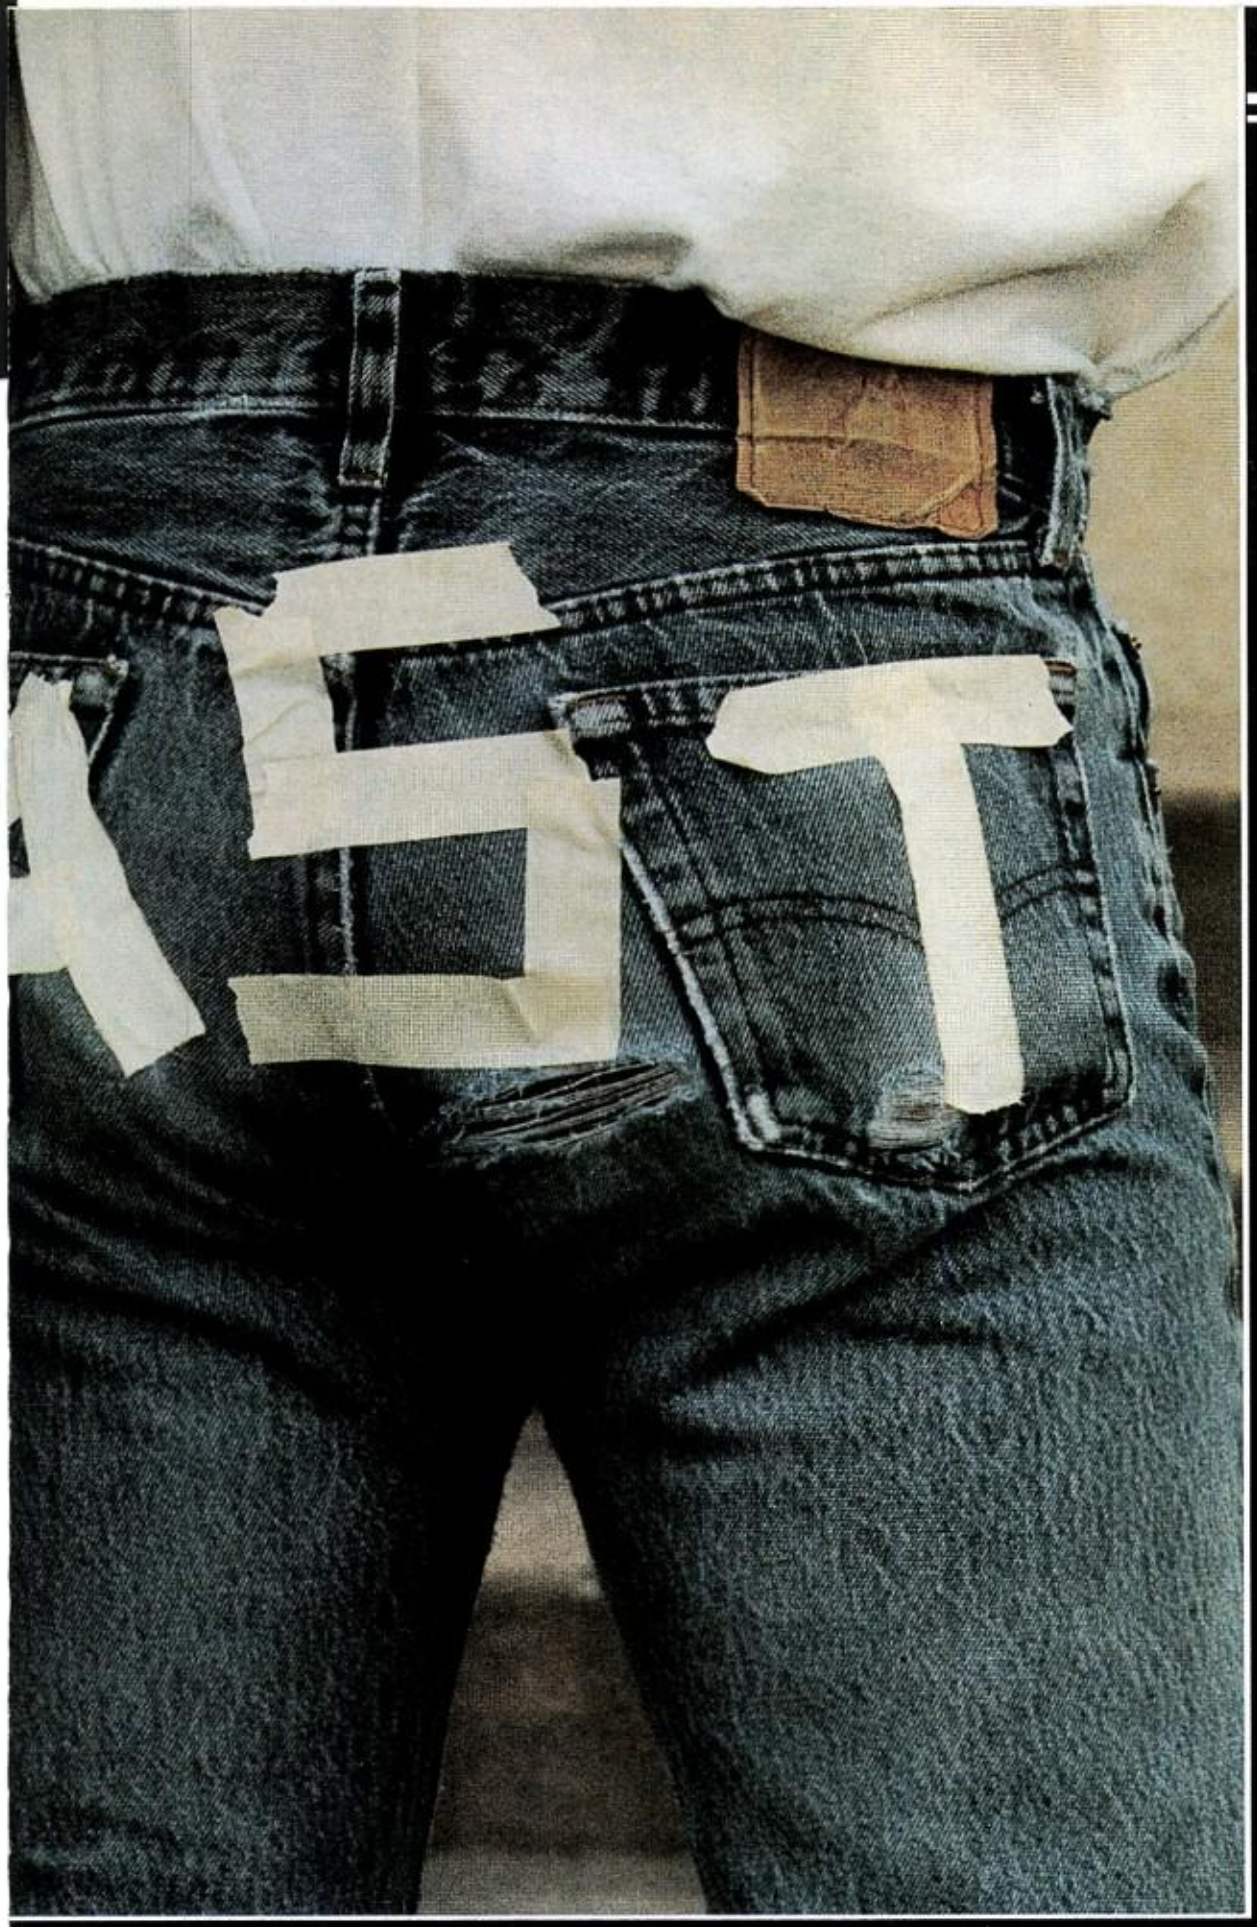
HAUBERK 1988
VOLUME 30



SHAWNEE MISSION EAST
7500 MISSION ROAD
SHAWNEE MISSION, KANSAS 66208

Tuesday, November 4, 3:01. A day at East. Senior Mike Byrd, editor of the Harbinger, stayed late to yell at the computer and put the finishing touches on the first computer edition of the newspaper. Senior Kevin Leff had just broken his ankle at football practice. Junior Debbie Gill was drawing up page layouts for the first yearbook deadline. Junior Erin Hill was facing last minute stage jitters for Harvey (she had actually seen him that morning.) Junior Jason Charismas stopped in for a chat with his English teacher, trying to decide if English literature was even remotely relevant to his life.



In many ways, all of the students are alike. All use the same blue lockers, walk down the same blue staircases, go to pep assemblies to cheer on athletes and cheerleaders in blue uniforms, and walk down the same halls plastered with blue banners promoting everything from the NHS Blood Drive to the Knight Spot. Yet, even a casual glance at students' clothes, cars, activities, or even college plans was enough to affirm that every Lancer was indeed very different. Every Lancer was a shade of blue.

For many, Lancer Day was an opportunity to indulge in the never out-grown passion for dressing up. For others, it served to heighten school spirit prior to the season's first football game. For still others, it was a chance just to have a good time with friends.

For some, Lancer Day was an opportunity to dispense with conventional dress and for a few hours, to let another side of their personalities emerge. Senior Chris Wilson, member of the varsity soccer team, opted for blue and white face paint and a soccer ball hat. (photo by Bailey Cecil)

INSIDE JOKE ADDS SPICE

D.I.D.

There are classic games such as Bridge and Monopoly, outdated games like Canasta and Tripoley, and our currently popular games, Pictionary and Scruples. Most games are played for amusement and sociability, a relief from daily stresses at school or work. Football, on the other hand, is a game that requires physical and mental toughness and a lot of hard work. Its competitive spirit adds the pressure and demands many games try to avoid. But isn't hard work the key to success? Shawnee Mission East coaches believe it is.

The five coaches, Bill Stiegemeier, John Reed, Russ Kokoruda, Dan Zollers, and Dave Barreca required 110% from the players at all times. Each coach specialized in a certain area of the field to provide individualized attention and counseling, thereby creating a stronger team as a whole. Head coach Stiegemeier coordinated each section to produce the best final result.

Many players agreed that Stiegemeier is uniquely able to motivate and encourage others. They said that he was always available to talk and listen with sincere interest and that his use of positive reinforcement helped maintain the positive attitude of the team. His basic philosophy about coaching is, "The coaches shouldn't put pressure on winning. If the players work hard at practice and gain self-confidence, the winning will come naturally."

"The greatest attribute of this year's team was the camaraderie between the juniors and seniors. They worked together as friends instead of competing with one another. With only five returning lettermen, the concentration of talent among the juniors was an asset to the team. Each position was filled so frequent subsitutions were possible and beneficial to the team's stamina," Stiegemeier said. "The coaches and players also had a great relationship. The team was easy to talk to, and they really wanted to be the best. Their unusual hard work ethic and willingness to cooperate was very helpful to the staff."

"The early season wins against Leavelworth and North helped fuse the team together and sent a flair of confidence into the air. Losing games simply proved the team was beatable and renewed their commitment to look for needed improvements. Senior Kevin Leff explained, "If we lose because the other team really beats us, we're disappointed but can go on. But if we lose because we haven't played up to our potential, our attitude is more negative. However, that encourages us to go out and work hard to improve our mistakes."

A team can work and work, but may eventually have to accept its weakness. East lacked team speed. This proved a detriment, but they were able to compensate for it through consistency. Senior linebacker and center Barry Nicbolson said, "We don't rely on just a few big plays to win the game. We try to make each play a big play." The mixture of talented players and distribution of leadership helped balance the team. Leff commented, "At different times, different people assume the leadership roles. That way we don't have to rely on just one or two people to motivate us on the field."

Players had other ways to keep the ball rolling. Inside jokes always add some spice to team fellowship. The mystery of D.I.D. still baffles many Lancers. Questions began flying when varsity players displayed their banner "What's D.I.D. all about?" during the sports rally on Lancer Day. The saying has been somewhat of a tradition since eight grade. Senior Kevin Latinis estimated, "We averaged eight D.I.D.'s per game in the first three games," while senior Mark Moore asked, "Which team?" Moore went on to explain this philosophy with, "Winning isn't everything, it's just how many guys you knock out of the game." The team will enjoy recalling the many jokes it shared: "Well, their backs aren't slippin'"; Coach Reed's reply, "I think Falk's got a question"; and in light of frequent losses, "I must have left my football savvy on the bus."

The Lancers finished the season with 3 wins and 6 losses. One of the worst breaks occurred with only a few seconds remaining in overtime against SM West. West had scored a touchdown but missed the extra point, allowing East a shot at the win. A last minute Lancer fumble at the one-yard line left both the players and fans dismayed. The 13-7 loss was a heartbreaker.

"The team maintained a positive attitude," Moore explained. "Maybe our record didn't show it, but we worked hard and felt on top most of the time throughout our season."

MIND GAMES

"There is always a time when a runner is not sure whether or not he will finish the race, but the best runners can push themselves beyond that point," says girls' cross-country coach John Haraughty. "Ninety percent of running is mental. If two runners have equal talent, the one with the better attitude will win." One way runners keep a good attitude is by not concentrating on their surroundings.

Senior Patty Bliss mentally detached herself by singing. "I zone out and it makes me forget the pain." She admitted that this tendency to temporarily ignore reality did produce some odd personal traits! "We (the cross-country team) are all a bunch of psychos. If you think about what you are doing, it just makes it worse." Senior Peter Braude claimed that when he ran, his head was crystal clear. "I just focus on whatever comes into my brain for as long as it interests me."

No runner can ignore all pain, though, and many runners were sidelined with injuries this season. Boys' coach Karl Englund and girls' coach Haraughty tried to maintain a policy of giving runners a rest if they couldn't run without affecting their motion. The coaches emphasized that the three most important meets of the year were League, Regionals, and State, so both coaches wanted as many of their athletes healthy as possible at the end of the season.

The strategy paid off. Both the boys' and girls' teams qualified for State competition, with the girls' team capturing first place at Regionals. The girls then finished fourth at State, while the boys finished ninth. Junior Darren Kennedy, who finished fourth overall and first for the East boys at the State meet, summed up the season: "The girls' team recovered from their early-season setbacks and did quite well at State. The boys' team was hampered by injuries throughout the season and, unfortunately, never fully recovered."

While each runner trains his body differently for a race, the most important element of running is mental, and it was this element that carried the cross-country team to a successful season.

UP TO PAR

Just like the three year old perched on a stool, unable to reach the cookie jar with each unsuccessful grasp, the girls' golf team had been frustrated after placing second in State six times during the last seven years, narrowly missing the coveted State Championship. All the three year old needed was a boost from a phone book; all the golf team needed was a little confidence to thrust them over the edge to victory.

"I knew that they were the best team in the state," explained Coach Norris Stauffer. "It was just a matter of convincing them." After an erratic start, the team gained momentum and pulled together in the last three tournaments of the year. Led by senior and three-year letter winner Dana Chase's second place finish and sophomore Anne Schoofs' sixth place finish, the Lancers captured the State Championship. In addition to Chase and Schoofs, the 1987 Championship team included Mary Anne Guestello, a three-year letterwinner, Lilly Oliver, Emily Sawyer, and junior Tracey Hobbs.

When practice started on the twentieth of August, Coach Stauffer met with a pleasant surprise. "Having eighteen girls out for golf is a plus," Stauffer noted. He was then faced with a problem most coaches would love to have: only six slots for eighteen girls. The intense competition which ensued reached its inevitable pinnacle the day before Regionals: a three-person play-off to decide the sixth and final spot on the varsity team. Senior leadership coupled with perseverance provided the winning formula for the Lancers at Regionals and at State.

"East has always been a dominant team," explained Dana Chase. Following in the tradition of Lancer golf, the girls placed first in Regionals leading up to their climatic finale with a first-place finish at State. Emily Sawyer said, "We've been working so hard for so long: I'm glad it finally paid off."

A TEAM WITH DEPTH

The girls' tennis team was not composed of just one or two outstanding players, but sixty-two adept girls. According to Coach Carolyn Howard, the team was the "best of the Shawnee Mission teams." During the regular season, the varsity squad was undefeated; the junior varsity was defeated only twice. Among important victories was the Shawnee Mission District Tournament where the team took first place for the tenth year in a row. Also, for the first time, the girls participated in the Emporia Tournament where they captured another impressive victory. However, the team had to work hard for the undefeated season. Sophomore Christa Gaus admitted, "The top players from the other Shawnee Mission schools were really good. We had very competitive, close matches."

Unlike many of the other sports, the girls' tennis team didn't experience any serious injuries or setbacks during the season. "We've been lucky this season," commented junior Janet Staab. "No one got hurt, and we didn't even have many cancellations due to rain."

Despite the size of the team, one of the largest in the district, Howard made sure each girl had many opportunities to compete. "It's good because there are so many people on the team, and yet she (Howard) played everyone pretty evenly," said senior Suzanne Jones. With such a large team, not every member was required to play in each tournament. Furthermore, doubles partners varied from tournament to tournament. For these reasons, most players agreed that the sport was, to a degree, individualized.

"We have just completed a decade of winning," proclaimed Howard following the Regional Tournament. "Now we just have to worry about the State Tournament in Lawrence." Five girls qualified for the state team: senior Deborah Butts, junior Lisa Denton, sophomore Kristin Butts, sophomore Buffy McLiney, and freshman Meredith McLiney. Due to rain, the competition had to be moved to an indoor facility. Unfortunately, this considerably slowed the tournament, causing it to last until about 11:00 at night. In spite of these conditions, the girls finished second. "I don't think the delays hurt us," remarked Butts, "but I think we've performed better in the past."

GREAT EXPECTATIONS

Going into the 1987 season, the varsity soccer team exuded confidence. This was understandable, considering the return of eight lettermen from last year's highly successful team and the 14-1 record of last year's junior varsity team. In many preseason predictions, East was picked to win the Sunflower League championship, and the possibility of a state championship appeared excellent. Co-captain Ivan Huntoon expressed the team's attitude when he said, "If things come together like they should, we'll win state." Also, a certain unity which had been lacking in last year's team had formed among the members of this year's squad. As senior Brent Puff put it, "Our team's camaraderie should be a key ingredient to our success."

However, the team soon found itself hurled back into the harsh world of reality. The first game of the season, against S.M. South, summed up the Lancers' early season troubles. East dominated almost the entire game and played strong defensively, but was unable to capitalize on several open-goal scoring opportunities, losing 1-0. The team came out of the pre-season tournament with two losses and a tie.

The Lancers hadn't lost much confidence, however, because Coach Williams had been experimenting with formations and positions, and the team knew it was capable of far better play. "We haven't started as well as we would have liked, but it's only a matter of time before we click into gear and play to our full potential," explained senior Chris Wilson. That time did not come immediately, however, as a victory against Lee's Summit was offset by losses to Olathe South and Lawrence. Although East dominated in every game, they simply were not scoring goals and so lost or tied.

Even at this point, the players believed the league and state championships were within their grasp. In an attempt to produce goals, Coach Williams offered an added incentive. Chris Jones said, "It's either feast or famine for us now. If we score a goal, Williams buys us a Big Mac, fries and a Coke." This tactic seemed to be successful, for the Lancers' season did an about-face. The team recorded victories over S.M. West and S.M. Northwest, both highly ranked in the city, and went on to an outstanding 6-2-1 record in October. Once again, the players' thoughts turned to the state playoffs. Jones commented, "Even though the start of the season will hurt our chances to win league, we should peak just in time to be successful at state."

Despite the high hopes, the playoffs resulted in more frustration and disappointment. In the first round, East won a 115 minute, double overtime, mudd-soaked marathon, which at times seemed more like a tag-team mud wrestling match, over Blue Valley North. Then, as if this was not enough, East and Bishop Ward played through double overtime with a 1-1 score. Finally, at the end of two sets of nerve-racking penalty kicks, the Lancers' season came to an excruciating end.

East's final record consisted of eight wins, seven losses, and five ties, a respectable season, but the team was painfully aware it had not lived up to its great expectations.

MIXED BAG

The key ingredients of a varsity volleyball team are, for starters, sound basic skills and the ability to work as a team. Also needed are a positive attitude and an excellent coach to boost the team's morale.

This year's varsity team was composed of four seniors, four juniors, and Crystal Lee, the only sophomore. Lee commented, "At first, I felt pretty isolated from the team because of my age. I am a setter, and I worked really hard to learn the complicated offense and defense." After many hours of grueling drills, conditioning, and ball handling, she proved her ability to her fellow teammates.

The team began the year by capturing third place at the JCCC tournament, and by mid-season they had an 8-4 record. As she analyzed the first half of the season, senior Wendi Spurney noticed a key ingredient missing in the team. "Everyone has very strong basic skills, but we need to work on putting everything together, and closing up our communication gap." Josie McLaughlin noticed this missing element as well and decided it had to do with the inconsistency of their playing.

Working hard to correct this fault, the team achieved its goals of beating Lawrence and Northwest, and the players began to look toward the state competition.

The hard work paid off in a second place finish at the league tournament, which was followed by a victory at substate — a much deserved two game victory over South.

For the first time in five years, the volleyball team packed their bags with pride and drove to Lawrence to attend the State championship. Although they did not place, the achievement was enough to give them a positive feeling about the season. The team's winning combination of ingredients led to a 24-13 record by the season's end.

NEW BLOOD

"You have to want to work hard," said senior Lisa Pazdernik. Practicing two hours a day, five days a week, gymnasts focused on polishing routines, dealing with day-to-day frustrations, and seeking self-improvement.

Coach Laurie Sallas encouraged hard work in practices while promoting a casual, supportive atmosphere. Describing daily practices, Pazdernik said, "It's a new learning experience. It's always something different so practices don't get redundant." Tiffany Schmelzinger, sophomore, remarked, "It's been different this year; people want to work harder." "The freshmen are better this season; therefore, the team is better on the whole," agreed Christy Jennings, junior.

However, beneath the gymnasts' appearance of ease at the meets lay hidden frustrations. Kristen Butcher, sophomore, was out of competition for three weeks with an injured ankle, and Lisa Pazdernik suffered from a back injury. "There are a lot of injuries because you're constantly using all your muscles," said Pazdernik. Most frequently injured are the knees, ankles, and back. Along with the possiblity of injuries, gymnastics also involved a great deal of time. A weekly schedule included 12 hours of training and as many as three meets a week.

Gymnastics is an individual sport, and daily feelings affect performance. "It's important to improve what you're doing and do your best — to strive to improve your placement in a meet, and especially to always have fun," said Pazdernik. As a result of this attitude, the team's record was significantly improved over last year's.

GREAT IN '88

Before each game of the 1988 varsity basketball season the S.M. East team performed an unusual ritual. Each player touched a special plaque inscribed with the words "Great in '88" and then broke from the pre-game huddle shouting the same phrase. Senior center Greg "Zoo" Zuanich explained the ritual: "the purpose of the saying was to remind us before every game that our ultimate goal was to win state." This goal seemed appropriate, for the Lancers possessed size, proven scorers, and three starters returning from last year's squad: Zuanich, senior point guard Doug Flint, and two-time All Sun Country pick, senior center Scott Smith. The team was extremely optimistic going into the season. Zuanich said, "We thought nobody would be able to match our talent."

Just how great the Lancers could have been may never be known, however, because the team was decimated by injuries. The first occurred when Smith broke his wrist in late August, causing him to miss the first six games of the season. Smith's absence worried the team, but they were confident that even in his absence they would exceed most fans' expectations. Senior forward David Burkhead commented, "Zoo really came through and did everything for us. Also, our early season schedule was not a difficult one." Thus, by the holiday break the Lancers had an impressive record of six wins and one loss. Smith's return to the lineup was a welcome one, however, because as Flint explained, "Things really started to pick up. Because teams started to sag on Zoo, it was great to have another big body down low, especially one who could practically score at will."

Even though Smith's return strengthened the team tremendously, the Lancers began to experience some adversity. Their schedule became much more difficult, and they suffered losses to S.M. West, Rockhurst, and Leavenworth, as well as turning in a disappointing performance at the Coffeyville tournament. In addition, an injury struck down a second key player. Senior forward Scott "Tall-Boy" Taylor badly injured his knee during a victory over Lawrence and was unable to play for the rest of the season. According to Zuanich, the team sorely missed Taylor: "Losing Scott hurt us a lot. It put much more pressure on the guards to score, and we lost a lot of quickness."

Thus, with four games left in the regular season, the team's record consisted of ten wins and six losses. Although they had no chance of winning the Sunflower League championship, the Lancers were optimistic about their chances at sub-state. Flint said, "If we peak at the right time, and it looks like we might, we'll have an excellent chance of going to the state tournament." The Lancers' bad luck continued, however, as yet another important player was put out of action by an injury. Flint sprained an ankle and missed the last four games of the season. The team's level of play dropped, and they suffered losses to S.M. South and Leavenworth, but finished with a win against Lawrence.

The Lancers then entered sub-state competition. Their first-round opponent was S.M. South, a team they were expected to defeat. The Lancers were outgunned, however, and were forced to take an early exit from post-season play. Thus, the season came to a disappointing close, but team members and fans still wonder — if the Lancers hadn't suffered so many injuries, just how great could they have been in '88?

THERE IS NO TOMORROW

Wrestling has always been one of the least respected and supported sports. The antics of the sham called professional wrestling have given people the wrong idea of what wrestling really is. Besides those turned off by the phoniness of Hulk Hogan and Andre the Giant, others have the belief that wrestling is nothing but two guys rolling around on the floor together. This couldn't be farther from the truth. Unfortunately, these misconceived ideas are going to continue until people actually attend a match and witness the unique blend of strength, dexterity, and skill which wrestlers display.

Non-wrestlers will never see the hours and hours of grueling conditioning and practice. Running the halls, the ramps, and the stairs of the school is just one of the activities that wrestlers engage in to keep themselves in shape. In addition to countless laps, they wrestle for half an hour every day. Wrestlers go through very demanding, sometimes super-human work-outs to ready themselves.

From this, the Lancer wrestlers formulated the theme for their season: There is no tomorrow. They all understand that when it is time for a match they need to be ready. All of the time spent in training comes down to a six-minute confrontation. "It (the theme) means giving all you have and of yourself for a short amount of time," explained junior Troy Duncan. "You don't really care about what happens afterward, but only with your one glorious moment." For the intense effort they put into such a short period of time on the mat, "there is no tomorrow" was a very apt theme for the 1987-1988 Lancer wrestling season.

One of the highlights of the team's wrestling season was the Lancers' third-place finish at the Shawnee Mission South Tournament, the highest finish for any Lancer wrestling team in over two years. In the league meet, Mark Cipolla placed first, Mike Crystal placed second, and John Brandemeyer took third in their respective weight classes. In Regionals, Pat Brown, Cipolla, Crystal, Jeff Morton, and Tom Stout all qualified for State.

RAW TALENT

Frustration — that seemed to be the general feeling concerning the girls' varsity basketball season. The season began in optimism with the return of several of last year's varsity players such as seniors Mara Billick, Shannon St. Denis and junior Kelly Johnson. Also adding to the team's strength was senior Shannon Hunter, junior Stacey McMillen, sophomore Crystal Lee and freshman Misty Peck.

Unfortunately, the December third season opener ended in disappointment when the Lancers, coached by Dave Rehfeld, were upset by Shawnee Mission North by a ten point margin. Although the girls came back to win their second game in the Turner Invitational Tournament with a score of 61-37, the team was still not off to a victorious season. Instead, the girls established a pattern of winning roughly every other game. Peck noted, "As soon as we'd win a game and think we were playing well, we'd lose the next game and be back where we started."

Perhaps contributing to the team's problems was the loss of Julie Dick and Karla Kalin, who helped lead last year's team to a fourth place finish at the State Tournament in Emporia. Furthermore, the team experienced some minor setbacks due to sickness and injury. Soon after the season began, Johnson suffered a sprained ankle which kept her out of action for three games. Later in January, Hunter, a consistent high scorer, missed several games when she came down with bronchitis.

Despite the team's losing record, it was perhaps the strongest team East has had for many years as far as raw talent goes. "Everyone on the team is definitely good, especially on an individual basis," commented Billick, "but when it comes down to a game, we seem to have problems playing as a team." Although the girls' record didn't drastically improve over the course of the season, things did gradually come together for them. Johnson added, "I agree that we're missing something, but I think that we'll be able to find it by the time we play in the SubState Tournament." The team was fairly confident about making it to the State Tournament as they had already beaten most of the teams in their SubState. In addition, they held the top-ranked Leavenworth team to ten points at the end of the regular season. The girls succeeded in making it to State after a 53-45 victory over Harmon and a 50-48 victory over Wyandotte, but their hopes were dashed when they lost their first game against a team ranked third in the nation.

Next year's varsity squad already looks strong based on this year's junior varsity season. Led by sophomores Jennifer Potts, Shannon Pfeiffer, and junior Tracey Hobbs, the team, coached by John Oman, won six of its first nine games. According to Oman, the girls were at their best when they played Lawrence in early January. Although they lost 40-42, their outstanding performance merited high praise from the Lawrence coach.

A LITTLE WINNING,

A LITTLE HELL

"When you win, it's just a game, but losing is hell," commented junior swimmer Hale Sheppard, effectively summing up the Lancer tankers' season: a little winning, and a little hell.

The swim team started the year off with a strong second place showing at the Olathe Invitational meet and a victory over the top-seeded Blue Valley Tigers. They continued that streak with a victory in the East Invitational held just before Christmas Break. The tankers were clearly giving notice to rivals Blue Valley, Northwest, and South that they were a force to be reckoned with.

But the team structured the year for two meets: League and State. All other competitions were to be secondary chances for swimmers to make state qualifying times.

The team had a fairly weak dual meet record in the months following Christmas, losing to South 99-75, Northwest 89-83, and Blue Valley in a close meet, but the team was able to control League with a combination of extraordinary depth and several quality swims.

East was able to place 4 swimmers in the top 12 scoring positions in every event with the exception of the 500 Free and Diving. The Lancers had several notable performances including Jason Perry's first place finish in the 200 Free with a time of 152.50 seconds, Todd Underwood's third place finish in the 50 and 100 Free with times of 23.08 and 51.20 seconds respectively, Deirk Copeland's second place finish in the 500 Free, and Keyle Rinehart's third place in the 100 Breaststroke.

Senior diver Mike Bernard, who finished fifth at League, described the meet, saying "League was like a dream come true."

The Lancers defeated rival Northwest with a team score of 305 points to Northwest's 272, but looked anxiously towards State, hoping to transfer their depth into a top three placing.

The team placed sixth at State behind Blue Valley, who won the meet narrowly over Northwest, South, Manhattan, and Wichita East.

Sophomore Kyle Rinehart, who qualified for state in the 100 Breast but did not place in the top twelve, described the meet: "I think that State was an anticlimactic end to the year. I hated to see the season end that way, especially for the seniors."

But the team was satisfied with their season, having accomplished much more than many thought they would, and the underclassmen look forward to a strong season next year with a little more winning and a lot less hell.

slip-sliding away with

PEP

The crowd roared as one by one each proud contestant attempted to prove his strength and courage by sliding farther than the others. The last young athlete had set what seemed to be an unbeatable mark, when in from the far end of the arena charged a valient black lancer on his dark steed. The crowd went berserk as the black lancer dismounted, sprinted towards the runway, sailed through the air, and slid to victory.

Is this a scene from some sort of medieval tournament? No, it is a scene straight from a Shawnee Mission East pep assembly which displayed this year's pep club's inspirational spirit. Indeed, the rally was a masterpiece of creativity. A huge yellow slip-and-slide was set up in the middle of the gym floor and covered with whipped cream. Then a member of each fall sport, outfitted in trash bags, performed a face-first slide. For the finale, Kevin Latinis, the pep club president, rode into the gym dressed as a black lancer on a moped. Latinis then proceeded to slide farther than any of the other contestants, signifying a victory for the Lancer spirit. As exceptional as this assembly was, it appears unlikely that it will become a tradition, because the gym floor almost had to be replaced due to damage caused by the whipped cream.

The boys' officers of the '87-'88 pep club were Kevin Latinis — president, Tyler Hoffman — vice president, Rob Ellis — secretary, and Brent Puff — treasurer. The girls' officers were Natalie Blackwood — president, Corinne McCanse — vice president, Michele Barker — secretary, and Susan Walden — treasurer. When asked about the pep club's duties, Hoffman replied that it was responsible for "running the pep assemblies, setting up for Homecoming, setting up after-game parties, making posters, and being rowdy at games." Latinis added that they also sold pep club t-shirts and the popular new "EAST" sweatshirts. According to Blackwood, "The pep club met every morning at 7:00 over donuts and milk."

The bursts of creativity which seem to have sparked the pep assemblies were attributed to the personalities of the officers. Ellis said of Hoffman, "His warped sense of creativity has added a whole new dimension to the assemblies this year — that is, when the administration allowed it."

keep on truckin'

ALL THE WAY

So she's a varsity cheerleader? Great! She learns a few routines, wears short skirts, and jumps around at the football games with loud guys in white pants. Fun and games for all . . . Right? Not quite.

"People just don't understand the commitment we put in, how many hours," pointed out senior cheerleader Shana Stephens. This year, especially, the twelve varsity cheerleaders found it necessary to dedicate a large part of their lives to cheering. "We cheered almost five days a week," claimed senior Laura McConnell. "Combine the time we spent this summer at cheerleading camp, the days we had to attend early-morning practices, and the hours we cheered after school, and we ended up having trouble finding time for anything else." It's not hard to understand what a difficult job cheerleaders had making time for family, friends, and schoolwork when they cheered not only for football and basketball, but also for baseball, volleyball, soccer, cross-country, gymnastics, wrestling, swimming and track.

Yet this time commitment had an unexpected effect on the cheerleaders. Instead of becoming bored with each other's company, they grew closer as a group. "We all get along and work together," said senior Corey Thomas. McConnell agreed, "We even went out before the games and just had a lot more fun with it." Another reason for the unique cooperation was the renewed six cheerleader system. In response to their overload of work, sponsor Carolyn Howard concluded that at some activities, only six of the twelve cheerleaders need attend. That decision forced the cheerleaders to cooperate and respect each other's needs. "Everybody had to work and help each other out. For instance, if I wasn't able to cheer on a certain day, I could usually find someone willing to trade with me so I wouldn't have to cheer," said senior Andrea Reeves.

And because of their success last year, a new group of senior yell-leaders returned this year to perform with the cheerleaders. According to head cheerleader Susan Kindred, the yell-leaders were "a fantastic group." "We loved working with the guys," Kindred recalled. But with the addition of the yell-leaders came an increase in practice time as well. The cheerleaders had to incorporate the yell-leaders into many cheers, which amounted to a large chunk of time.

Overall, cheerleading is not what it appears to be on the surface. Underneath each pep assembly performance lies a week of training. Behind each cheer at the football game are weeks spent at cheerleading camp. But what is apparent when the cheerleaders perform is that these girls aren't chosen simply for looks, but also for dedication and a willingness to work long hours to promote school spirit.

diverse UNIFORMITY

In the words of Shakespeare, "That great vow, which did incorporate and make us one." In the words of drill team captain Martha Jimeson, "Our goal is to perform as one."

In those statements is the spirit of the drill team — a group of very different and unique girls, all united by a desire to work as a single entity. Each arrived at the daily a.m. practices carrying with her all the characteristics of an individual, but when the music began each girl was transformed into a shade of a single force. "We were all one big family," insisted co-captain Gidget Dobson. "We knew what we wanted, and we all worked very hard for it."

How did they achieve such uniformity? A major factor was that this year the drill team and the flag team, previously separate activities, merged to form a single group. Dobson justified the change by pointing out, "Now each member of the drill team can do anything that's given to them. When we were two separate activities we couldn't work together as well, but now we're a single large specialty."

The great vow of being a member of the drill team has successfully incorporated these students into a single unit. Practicing from seven in the morning all through first hour honed their skills to a fine edge. And when the music played during half-time of the football or basketball game, instead of thirty girls performing on the field, there was only one.

TRADITION

Stop. Take a minute to travel back in history to the Middle Ages. You are sitting at a round table, somewhat stiffly, in a polished suit of armor, discussing an upcoming battle against the Raiders. Suddenly a Heralder dressed in her fancy garb enters and sounds a trumpet before announcing the arrival of — of all things — the SME cheerleaders.

This tradition has become a part of school spirit performed by the Heralders. They begin the pep assemblies and basketball games with a ceremony including a trumpet salute, and they assist the candidates during Homecoming. Junior Annette Cockayne explained, "We're required to attend all home varsity football and basketball games. That way I get really wrapped up in the games and feel like I'm a part of school spirit." Cockayne also explained, "We don't have regular practices since there isn't much to learn. During tryouts we learn the trumpet routine, and the seniors answer any other questions we have. There's always a mixture of juniors and seniors so someone can carry on the next year."

This is the second year Carolyn Howard has sponsored the Heralders and also the Letter Girls, a sophomore-freshman spirit organization. Howard explained that the six Heralders are chosen according to their appearance, poise, and trumpet routine. Letter Girls are also chosen for appearance and poise, as well as their chants and routine. The Letter Girls spell S-M-E-L-A-N-C-E-R-S in their formation, cheer and chant with the cheerleaders, and perform pom-pom routines at the games. Freshman Lisa Breytspraak enjoys going to games, and likes being a Letter Girl as a visible part of school spirit. "We practice every Thursday morning at 6:30 and have to attend all home football and basketball games. We go to some girls' basketball games, wrestling meets and one swim meet." Although the Letter Girls have no connection with East's medieval history, they are developing the tradition the Heralders have been a part of for many years.

"now you're making music."

CHOIR

A high pitched beep comes over the intercom.

"Take your places everyone." The members of fifth hour Choraliers talk and joke among themselves while Dan Zollars takes role. The pitches for warm-ups are given on the piano, but no one pays attention. Zollars begins to direct with a very bored look on his face. After about five seconds, the choir realizes that they should be singing instead of talking.

After several octaves and vowels, warm-ups are finished.

"Take out 'The Friendly Beasts.' "

The pitch is given and the choir sings, " 'I,' said the cow, all white and red, 'I gave him my manger for . . . .' "

"You/are/all/sing/ing/like/this," Zollars moves his jaw stiffly up and down. "Can't you keep your mouths open?" He smiles, "I know you can."

" . . . Thus every beast by some good spell, in the stable dark was glad to tell of . . . "

"Hey, we have this happy place here and how are you singing it?" Zollars hunches his shoulders, looking like a little boy who has just dropped his ice cream cone on the side walk. "Please, show some excitement."

The choir then practices the whole song, keeping in mind all of Mr. Zollars' pointers. It sounds remarkably better.

He smiles. "Now you're making music."

To an outsider, Mr. Zollars' teaching style might seem a little crazy. On a given day, one could see him showing the class pictures of his grandson, telling stories from his childhood, or explaining hazy lyrics in the music. One might see the whole choir walking around the room in step to the music, joining in a back-rub chain, or individual members joking with Zollars.

Despite this seemingly laid-back atmosphere, choir requires a good deal of work from each member. They sing every day. They occasionally meet in sectionals on their own time, and before concerts they have after-school and evening rehearsals.

Some days no one feels like singing, and it is hard to meet the high standards Zollars sets. Lara Dickey said, "We all like singing, but some days we're so tired that Mr. Zollars feels more like a slave driver than a teacher. But he's not. Really." This is when the choir needs part of Zollars' special tension relief. He makes them forget that they don't want to be singing, and he makes them learn something in the process.

When the choir works hard and shows improvement, they receive much deserved praise. Of course it is usually mixed with a little humor. "You worked hard today, and it shows . . . But don't think that's enough for the month of December. Altos, put your folders away." -Kristin Schmidt

A SONG

"Every day we just sat there and blew through these befuddling objects. Then one day . . . Wow! It sounded like a song!" realized Senior Taco Winkler, a member of both band and orchestra. And although Winkler's observation might be facetious, it captures the spirit of many of the schools' musicians, because it is the music that separates band and orchestra from other classes.

"We had to work really hard outside of class. In other classes you did your homework and you were done, but in band and orchestra you had to keep practicing and practicing because you can always improve," claimed Senior Genevieve Kunst. Instead of being motivated by good grades, band and orchestra members are driven by their attachment to music and performance. Perhaps the best example of this is that a large number of the band and orchestra members were accepted to compete at the state tournament this year.

For orchestra members, this love of music led to a special relationship with the conductor, Jonathan Lane. "The thing about orchestra is you had to work as a group, so as a result each person must sacrifice a piece of his individuality. In the actual performance of the music, the orchestra becomes a reflection of the conductor," decided Kunst. At their district wide performances and special events such as "Music Appreciation Night," the orchestra played a variety of music including works by Bach and Mozart. "The music was pretty difficult in one sense," concluded Senior Elana Fremerman, "but that was because it was hard to master the style, not the notes."

For band members, their dedication did not end with music. "It's not just practicing on the instruments. It's the marching. For the entire first quarter we came at 7:00 every day to practice for the football half-time shows," said Senior David Manica. On top of that the band members were busy selling fruit and cheese to raise money for their annual trip to St. Louis. But the hard work and committment payed off when each member of band and orchestra realized that he had been a part of making the song come together.

ONCE UPON A MATTRESS

"Once upon a time, Broadway theatergoers were wowed by an 'uproarious Broadway hit,' the inside sotry of what really happened to the infamous princess who was so sensitive that she could not sleep on twenty downy mattresses when a single, tiny pea was placed underneath. Audiences at S M East were equally thrilled when Prince Dauntless the Drab and his Princess Winnifred were introduced on February 4, 5, and 6 on the East stage. The story tells about the goings on in a medieval royal court where the test for any girl aspiring to marry the Crown Prince, Dauntless the Drab, is that she be so tenderly reared that she could feel the rude presence of that proverbial pea under the stack of mattresses. (This synopsis appeared in East's official program and was written by Audrey Cheng of the publicity crew.)

At the beginning of the rehearsals many wondered if this lesser-known musical would draw a large crowd as last year's musical had. But that thought quickly vanished as both the cast and crew set to work. Prince Dauntless, played by senior Mike Porter, realized that Princess Winnifred, senior Gwen Coleman, might be his last chance for marriage. Comedy intervenes because Dauntless, as the fumbling and shy Prince, and Winnifred, the earthy and raucous Princess, make an unlikely pair. Porter commented that "comedy is more difficult than drama because of the timing. But all the leads this year were very comedy-oriented people who knew how to get and play the laughs."

It was this constant hint of humor that helped to create comraderie in the cast. "It was a strong cast all the way through," stated senior Brogan Sullivan who portrayed the Minstrel; "everyone grew into their parts. I can't imagine it being cast any other way."

However, the show could not have been successful without the expertise of both the orchestra and crews. The orchestra put in many hours of practice even before being united with the cast. "It was a lot of work, but it was really interesting to see how it was all put together," said junior Susan Newton, orchestra member. The crews, whose work schedules began at three and ended at six every day put in over 800 hours of work on the elaborate set. Many crew people also surrendered their Saturdays to build stairs, construct balconies, and create three dimensional bricks. Senior John Denby helped to coordinate all these aspects for the final performances by taking the position of stage manager. One difficult scene change, from the bedchamber to the throne room, kept the crews on their toes. Seniors Marcia Bertsch and sophomore Janel Ceule helped the cast to look dynamic in their medieval costumes. When not mending and organizing the multitude of costumes, Bertsch and Ceule could be found backstage helping with quick costume changes.

All in all, it was the expert staging, costumes, music, set, and choreography that united both the cast and crews to produce the musical. Senior Cassie Marshall cited Once Upon A Mattress as "the best high school production that I've seen this year. I think anyone who didn't attend missed a top-notch production."

PERFORMANCE

Mystery and suspense mixed with humor were the key elements of the 1987 Fall Play, Harvey, about a man named Elwood P. Dowd whose best friend is a six-foot white rabbit. The play ran three successful shows with a more than positive audience response. Senior Gwen Coleman believed the turnout for the fall play to be "the best I've seen in my three years here at East." A large part of this success was due to the clever marketing idea of Leslie Barewin. By creating a mail-in ticket purchase form, Barewin, a junior, enabled many people to buy their play tickets through the mail.

The nerve-racking tryouts provided Missy Taylor, director, with many difficult casting decisions. "I was pleased with the amount and level of talent in the open auditions," commented Taylor. The official cast list was posted after the callbacks for leading roles were held, and the rigorous rehearsal began — four to five days a week for seven weeks.

A welcome addition this year were the highly professional sets masterminded and constructed by Ken Brown, UMKC, and the crews. After designing the blueprints, long hours of building began with many students like stage manager, Hunt Wornall, staying at school until 12 o'clock at night working on the set. While it is the actors and actresses who interpret the lines and dialogue, the crews serve the play with cues for lights, sound, and arrangement of the sets. It is the stage manager who combines both the actors and the technical aspects of the play into one fluid movement. Wornall, backed by crews ranging from publicity to costumes to lighting, helped to create the easy flow indicative of East plays. "Because of Ken Brown and the professional sets, it really helped me get into my character. I'd walk around between rehearsals to get the feeling of the time period," recounted junior Erin Hill.

"I was extremely pleased with all the hard work by the cast and crews. It was an excellent production," Taylor happily reminisced. In keeping with the high standards of the Lancer Drama Department, Harvey provided its audience with entertainment and one thought-provoking question: How did that door open?

Thespians is a national club students join out of a common love for theater. Senior Jill Metzler, vice president, described the club as "the only place you can be absolutely corny and still fit in perfectly."

To be an official member, one has to earn ten Thespian points which amounts to 100 hours of work. The Thespians Club has as members not only actors and actresses, but also people interested in stage, make-up, costuming, lights, and sound. Sponsor Missy Taylor's role is two-fold: she devotes her time to the productions as well as to field trips and parties held by the Thespians. Fund raisers such as selling ornaments and selling concessions at football games allowed them the opportunity to plan many activities. They visited two workshops in Manhattan and Topeka where they learned about auditioning and make-up; took field trips to Waldo Astoria and Martin City Melodrama to see plays; and planned a Christmas party on December 22. The money was also used to buy modern plays to add to the library. "The library needs to be updated pretty badly. All they've got are a whole lot of Neil Simon plays," said senior Mike Porter, president of Thespians.

Senior Marcia Bertsch said, "We have a reputation of being strange, but at least, we're secure enough in ourselves to have real fun. We're not a shy group."

The Thespians are not just an organization of friends that enjoy acting; they take their shows seriously, and it pays off. This year, the Lancer troop won the best in the state Thespian award for community and school work. As Marcia Bertsch said, "We play around a lot, but when it comes down to it, Thespians put on darn good shows."

german club sponsors foreign students

GUTEN TAG

The German club, sponsored by Joel Nagel, organized a student exchange with a secondary school in Germany that brought 25 German students to East for 3 weeks this year.

The students attended Gymnasium Hittfeld in Hittfeld, West Germany, where Nagel taught 3 years ago on a teacher exchange. They ranged in age from 15-17 and stayed with families of German club members. One memorable exchange with the students stemmed from the American/German language barrier.

Senior Karin Denes, who had a German student stay with her, had just stopped to buy gasoline with several German students. "They all bought sodas, and a few minutes later they began whispering to each other and laughing. Apparently, as they read the ingredients on the back of the can, they had mistranslated the word 'preservatives' to mean 'condom.' "

Some of the activities planned for the exchange students included a picnic at Loose Park, a trip to Worlds of Fun, and attendance at a Royals game where, according to German club member Genevieve Kunst, "the name of their group was displayed on the scoreboard." Kunst also said that the Germans especially liked going to haunted houses and watching the movie The Blues Brothers.

German club member Jeff Van Blarcom took German student Gerrit Stumpe to a KU football game, and, although Stumpe had difficulty understanding the game, Van Blarcom distinctly recalls Stumpe telling him that he thought the cheerleaders were "funny."

This summer Nagel intends to take about 25 of his German club students to Germany to stay for a few weeks in Hittfeld. Through the exchange, he hopes to give students extra incentive to pursue the language. Also, Nagel says, "I hope that by going to Germany, my students will learn that it is a special place, not just another spot on the map."

student naturalist

LIVING LAB

Snakes and spiders — if these things excite you, enroll in student naturalist. Interest in the class has gone up this year, probably because of the more visible student naturalist facilities off of the north ramp. Previously, enrollment for the course only filled two classes, but this year five full classes were taught. According to student naturalist teacher James Lockard, the purpose of student naturalist is to teach students about biology through resources other than books.

Student naturalist is primarily taken by students who want an extra biology credit, but who do not care for large amounts of book work. It is, in effect, a living lab that offers students an opportunity to study live animals instead of ones floating in preservatives. The conversion of the smoking lounge to an area for biological study has drawn support from students like senior Bill Blake, who said, "I'm glad they turned the smoking lounge into something constructive."

One of student naturalist's major projects involved bringing grade-school kids to East to learn about biology. The young students were shown different presentations dealing with various aspects of animals and biology to stimulate their interest in biology. By teaching others, the East students reinforced their own knowledge of biology and also had a good time in the process. Blake said, "The kids are having a good time, which makes it all the more fun for us (the student naturalists)."

Some of the more interesting animals in tbe student naturalist room included a ten foot Burmese Python, a Spiny Lizard, a Black and White Tegu Lizard, and, Blake's favorite, a Red-Kneed Tarantula. Senior Christin Joslin said, "I like the snakes, but my favorite is the baby California King Snake."

The main aim of most of the students enrolled in student naturalist stemmed from a fairly simple curiosity. As senior Marshall Barton put it, "I wanted to learn more about animals."

CATEGORIES

How many times have you completely prepared for a test that was easier than you expected? What could you do with all that extra information floating around in your head — forget it? You could put it to use by trying out for the Categories team. The members of the Categories team, sponsored by Nick Paris, were chosen based on their performance on a 180 question fill-in-the-blank test covering literature, geography, history, science, and general information. Out of approximately thirty students who tried out, thirteen became members of the team. The Categories team has experienced several changes this year. In addition to a new sponsor, the team now has managers Peter Hughes and Mac Beall, who serve as alternates. Also, the members of the team must attend regular practices where they compete against each other. The practices seemed to benefit the team as it has won three out of its first four competitions.

Despite the loss of Greg Wimpey, last year's star player who led his teammates to an outstanding one-loss season, the team was off to an encouraging start by winning its first two matches against Blue Valley North and Shawnee Missions South. "At first we were nervous without Greg, but we worked hard to win the first matches. Then we knew we were capable of a good season," said senior Kirsten Parkinson. Unfortunately, these victories were followed by defeat in a sixteen-team tournament at Bishop Miege. "We were seeded first going into the tournament," explained senior Genevieve Kunst, "but we kept getting beaten to the buzzer." This defeat proved to be only a minor set-back, however, as the team came back to win its third match against Olathe North by a score of 34-15. In January, the Categories team sent their five best players to what is thought to be the toughest competition of the year, the HiQ tournament, which featured teams from across the state. There, the team added another honor to its record, making the list of the top sixteen teams with a rank of tenth.

POLITICALLY . . .

In a primarily Republican community, the Young Conservatives club fits right in at East. The fairly strong organization is sponsored by social studies teacher Nick Paris, and meets about every week to discuss national and local political issues. "One of the main objectives of the group is to make students more politically aware," states Paris. What is surprising is how politcally aware these students already are.

During their meetings the discussion can wander from organizing debates with the Young Liberals to the fine details and implications of negotiations with Russia. In fact, the first debate this year dealt with the arms treaty with the Russians. Although a few students seemed to carry the discussion, senior Trace Schmeltz emphasized that "everyone at the meetings knows the information well."

Club President Patrick Barelli said, "It is a good idea to start becoming politically aware now that students are approaching voting age." To that end, the Young Conservatives planned to start a campaign to interest students in voting. Barelli thought that by making students aware of their responsibilities and rights, "interest in both the Young Conservatives and Young Liberals clubs will increase."

Another activity the Young Conservatives Club planned was to participate as campaign helpers in either local or national political campaigns. On the local level, they would probably assist the Johnson or Jackson County Republican Office, while on the national level they might participate in a Republican Presidential candidate's campaign.

Through these activities at school, in the community, and perhaps even the nation, the Young Conservatives hoped to add to their knowledge of politics in America.

- Mike Byrd

AWARE

Sounds of heated discussion and even shouting rolled into the hall outside of room 114 Thursdays after school this year. Someone shouted "End Contra Aid!" while another retorted with the standard "Communism must be checked!" This is the ruckus commonly associated with the debates sponsored by the Young Liberals Club and attended by their adversaries, the Young Conservatives.

The Liberals are a group of politically aware students who have decided on a liberal philosophy of politics. Liberals sponsor and Honors English teacher Bill Boley described the participants: "I think that most kids in the Liberals are similar to those in the Conservatives — people interested in world and national political events. It is a healthy interest. Most kids in both clubs are more aware of current events than 95% of adults in this country."

Students gave various reasons for their involvement in the Liberals. Some participated out of social concern and others out of strong feelings about political awareness. "I feel it is important for people not only to be aware of what's going on in the world around them, but to think about the important issues and have opinions on them," said Junior Mike Cohn, an active member of the Liberals.

Other motivating factors for joining the group seemed to be a desire for intelligent conversation and debate. Cohn explained: "I enjoy spending time around people who bother to inform themselves on the issues and have opinions similar to mine. Most people don't think about current events at all, and that's too bad."

Yet once the Liberals had gathered in one spot and at one time, a difficult feat for individuals so active in so many diverse organizations, Boley said they had difficulty figuring out what they should do with all of their political energy.

"Both groups have had trouble deciding how to channel their energies and interests. We (the Liberals) had a little fun with the Bork nomination, but Ginsberg withdrew before we had time to enjoy ourselves," said Boley.

That is not to say that the Liberals accomplished nothing. Many felt they played a part in swaying views on the Bork nomination and other current political events. Boley elaborated, "We've had some interesting discussion and lively debates, but some trouble deciding on any other activities."

But even with few other prospects for action, the Liberals are not likely to be discouraged in their pursuit of a higher knowledge of governmental affairs. They will continue to strive to reach new and louder levels of debate with the Conservatives.

Arguing The Point:

DEBATE

When arguments end in everyday life, a great deal of controversy usually remains as to who won the battle. Usually both parties are too stubborn to relinquish their positions and admit that they lost the confrontation. When this particular situation arises, it would be highly beneficial to have a third, impartial party present to decide who won the argument. Unfortunately, in everyday life a neutral person cannot be present every time people disagree. To solve this problem, people get involved in debate. The self-satisfaction of being judged and knowing that they defended their point better than their opponent is the motivation that drives debators.

Each year a different topic is debated. This year's topic was whether the federal government should adopt a policy to increase political stability in Latin America. "It is an area where many Americans are lacking in knowledge," commented debate sponsor Larry Brown, in support of this year's topic. "It gives our students an opportunity to learn more about our neighbors to the south." To do research on Latin America, debators spent hours each week finding information for their arguments in such publications as The New York Times and The Wall Street Journal.

Besides the research, debators also need to analyze the person judging the debate. "Different judges look for different things," explained junior Duane McLaughlin. "A college judge will watch for speed and originality, but a less experienced judge will be more concerned with your delivery and speaking skills. The key to being a good debator is looking at the judge and determining what he's looking for."

Among the over sixty people who participated in debate, from freshmen to seniors, two debators made it to the top. East's top debating team, consisting of McLaughlin and sophomore Jason Wright, had a very impressive season, finishing fourth in the Abiline tournament, third at Emporia, second in Topeka, and first at the Olathe tournament. Sadly, their year came to a disheartening end. At the Regional Tournament, only the top two teams qualify for the Nationals. Unfortunately, McLaughlin and Wright narrowly missed qualifying for the Nationals, placing third in the competition.

Despite not having a team qualify for Nationals, it was still a successful year for the East Debate team. Hard work, and research contributed to the success of the year. McLaughlin summed up debate by saying, "You get as much out of it as you put into it."

A NEW VOICE

As Voice literary magazine editors began to start up the magazine's production at the beginning of this year, they had ambitious goals in mind: producing two issues instead of one (as was previous tradition) and using a new method of typesetting on school-owned computers.

The editors and staff members also adopted a new attitude towards publicizing the magazine. A new position of publicity editor was created with the purpose of increasing submissions to the magazine and changing purchasing of the magazine. Said senior Jenny Cowden, publicity editor, "We made banners and posters, colored flyers, put an ad in the Harbinger, frequently placed notices in the morning announcements, and talked about it all the time."

Senior Stephanie Sawyer, co-editor-in-chief of the magazine, assessed the results of the publicity drive: "We have had almost double previous years' submissions as a result of increased awareness. The fact that we had a large staff gave word-of-mouth publicity to the magazine in that people heard about it from their friends."

The staff of the magazine was in charge of reviewing all submissions and discussing their worth. This year's staff was larger than ever before, containing over 20 people who were roughly divided into a literary staff and an art staff, although many participated in both capacities.

However, while judging submissions at their Thursday after-school meetings, some members strongly disagreed about taste in both literary and art submissions. The editorial staff had some influence in the outcome, but overall final decisions were made by the staff voting as a whole. Literary staff member Elana Fremerman explained, "On several occasions, people in the art department didn't think that the literary staff should decide what was good art and what constituted an accurate representation of the student body."

When final decisions were made regarding what material would see print, the staff was able to arrive at a consensus. "Most of the material published was well accepted by everybody," concluded Fremerman.

After all decisions were finalized, the submissions had to be typed into the computer in the desired format and sent to the printer. This was the first year that publications at East, and district wide, began to typeset inside the school on Macintosh computers, and it was a learning experience for all involved. At first the process was quite slow, but those forced to deal with the machines attained a certain proficiency on them. It was difficult to begin the process, but the editors thought that the final results were worth the trouble.

Editors and staff met the challenge of dramatically changing the magazine with a certain relish and felt a sense of accomplishment and satisfaction with the product of their efforts.

HARBINGER

The interviews, the articles, the photographs, the layouts, the deadlines — the Harbinger. In addition to the complicated process of preparing a weekly newspaper, the staff of the fall Harbinger had to contend with adjusting to a new computer system. Until this year, the newspaper staff sent its articles to a commercial printer to be set and published. With the new system, the writers set their own type (which had to be perfect because there was no time to proofread first drafts). A computer disk containing all of the articles was then sent to the district printer where the articles were printed and returned to the school to be arranged into layouts. Finally, the layouts and any other information needed were sent to the district printer and were returned in the familiar form of the Harbinger. One of the many advantages of this system was that it was much less expensive than employing a commercial printer, making it possible to produce larger issues of each newspaper. Also, color backgrounds have been added to some features as a result of the new process. "With color, we've had more art and theme pages than in the past," noted Editor in Chief Mike Byrd. However, no new system can be established without certain problems.

"This staff has come of age — the computer age — and not without difficulty," said Harbinger sponsor Robert Dillon. Learning about the computer system was the hardest part of the fall semester, resulting in extra work for the staff at times. News Editor Anne West commented, "Sometimes we had to type a story into the computer two or three times before we got it right. Then we couldn't figure out how to save it and print it." Unfortunately, such confusion prompted the cancellation of an issue, something never done before. As these problems work themselves out, the computer can be used to perform more tasks, such as arranging layouts. Until then, each semester's new staff will have to enter the computer age of the Harbinger with patience and persistence.

the more things change . . .

HAUBERK

"You never know what to expect when you walk through that door," claimed senior David Feiock; "No two days are ever the same." Is Feiock referring to his new job at the day-care center? Maybe he is speaking of his brother's bedroom? No, he is talking about his seventh hour class which is none other than Hauberk. Possibly the one constant in a class like yearbook is that it was inherently disorganized. In contrast to "normal" classes such as physics or English, no two students carry the same responsibilities. "One day I'm checking over receipts, and the next I'm sending last year's seniors the supplement," said business manager Andrea Reeves. In addition, each writer is assigned a different set of stories, each photographer is asked to take pictures of different events, and of course the editors and other managing personnel are required to perform unique responsibilities. Student/Faculty Editor Shana Stephens remembered, "It would get pretty crazy when we had to proof 15 articles in one class period." As a result, the entire class atmosphere is that of variation and change.

"We've changed the look of the book by going on the basis of 'less is more,'" explained Editor in Chief Holly Smith, in reference to the newly spacious layouts. "Also, we've tried to improve the quality of photography." But possibly the biggest change occurring this year dealt with the theme of the yearbook. Each year the Hauberk is written around a general, uniting theme. But this year, according to Assistant Editor in Chief Patty Bliss, "We tried to have a low-key theme .... 'Shades of Blue' leaves a lot of flexibility."

STUCO

Does Student Council actually have a say in what affects the entire student body? StuCo sponsor Jim Lockard thinks so. Lockard said, "We are not getting paid to make administrative decisions, but we are here to bring forth new ideas dealing with student activities. StuCo doesn't govern, we counsel. That's why it is called Student Council." StuCo president Sebastian Kuelps said, "Our goal this year was the same as any year: to provide a good link between students and faculty. It was pretty smooth sailing this year; we didn't have any major problems."

StuCo assembles every other week on Wednesdays during school hours. Lockard said, "This year the group has been more efficient than last year. The in-school meetings seem to be working well." StuCo vice president John Trager said, "It's hard to describe what we do in meetings. Everyone has a different part in them."

Preparations for all of the school dances, elections, Lancer Day, and Lancer Fest kept StuCo busy all year long. Charity week, also sponsored by StuCo, was extremely successful. StuCo earned and donated $5,000.00 to charity through the annual bake auction and through the talent show. Lockard commented, "This was by far the most money raised from charity week in a high school."

Trager, along with secretary Laura McConnell and treasurer Beth Stopperan, attended a StuCo camp over the summer to prepare for the '87-'88 school year. Trager said, "We learned how to work with others and how to be good communicators."

StuCo members are looking ahead and have planned a newsletter for next year. Lockard said, "It was decided this year to put out a newsletter from now on to inform students of what does go on during the meetings."

CULTURES

The International Club is made up of students who strive to promote world friendship and understanding. Through various fund raisers and social events, these students created a closer link between foreign students around the world. The club's sponsor, Gene Criley, worked with officers Sarah Landon, president; Emily Sawyer, vice president; Brogan Sullivan, treasurer; Ted Houdek, publicity; Corinne McCanse and Christin Joslin, hospitality; and Marie Fleming, secretary.

"Making them feel comfortable and getting them involved," said Sarah Landon, "is the purpose of the International Club." One way members did this was by supplying the exchange students with pencils and paper to start off the year. The club sponsored nine foreign students who stayed either at an East student's home or with a family in the community. Meeting every other week, the International Club provided many activities for the foreign students, such as trips to the Renaissance Festival, a patio party, and a Christmas party. In order to support the club and bring AFS students to SME, they raised funds by working on the Lobster Launch.

Commenting on the effectiveness of the club, Jacqui Foster, a foreign exchange student from New Zealand who stayed with sophomore Aaron Bible, said, "They are really good. They organize a lot of functions and show you around. I felt like I had some friends."

Along with making foreign students comfortable, the International Club promoted awareness among East students about different cultures. Speakers recounted their experiences in other countries. Seniors Rob Kroenert, Monique Cox, and Malina Bey presented accounts of their summer trips to Paraguay, the Dominican Republic, and Russia, and the foreign students told about their countries. Through these speeches and activities, the club has offered students a chance to learn about other countries and make friends at the same time.

VOLUNTEERS

S.A.D.D., student ambassadors, SHARE, and ESP add up to one thing — people helping other people. Each of the four organizations requires nothing more than interested, caring volunteers.

Counselor Debbie Atkinson sponsored S.A.D.D. (Students Against Driving Drunk), which was implemented five years ago. Meetings are held once a week to plan activities and to discuss old and new ideas and their effectiveness. Atkinson said, "We like to stick to the national goals — making students aware that automobile accidents involving drug and/or alcohol use are the number one cause of death among persons aged 16-24. We're trying to lower this number." The goals of the nationwide S.A.D.D. are to eliminate drunk drivers and save lives, and to alert high school students to the dangers of drinking and driving. S.A.D.D. executives Amy Miller, Martha Jimeson, John Arnoldy, Megan Waugh, Kristin Knight, Polly Cooper, and Tracey Cohen actively involved themselves in the organization. This year S.A.D.D. launched poster campaigns (prior to homecoming and prom) reminding studnets not to drink and drive. They also planned and held anti-drinking & driving assemblies in November and in the spring. In December, S.A.D.D. placed "safe holiday" reminders on students' windshields. Atkinson said, "We are just trying to make sure that our friends and people we care about don't drink and drive." S.A.D.D. and SHARE co-sponsored an after game party in February.

Atkinson also sponsored student ambassadors. These volunteers participated in a training seminar prior to visiting grade schools and middle schools to talk about topics such as alcohol and drug prevention, family relationships, feeling good about oneself, peer pressure, and how to help a friend. Atkinson said, "How to help a friend is the most useful topic and perhaps the least intimidating because it is not as personal if it is not yourself that you're talking about." The ambassadors gave three to four minute speeches to warm the kids up, and then a question and answer period was encouraged for an interactive environment. Senior Margi Thomas said, "It is such a good system because kids who are too scared to talk to adults but who are curious get a chance to talk honestly with other students who won't blame them for what they are." Atkinson stated, "The target group is the fifth and sixth graders because social skills and resistance are important then." Atkinson continued, "This program lets younger students hear it straight from the high school kids that not everyone thinks it's 'cool' to drink. We do not tell them not to drink, necessarily, but we do tell them that it should be their choice."

"Juice it up," smoke out campaigns, Peanut Butter Week, Big Brother/Big Sister, new student breakfasts, Ho Ho Hotline — who is responsible for all these ideas? Members of SHARE (Students Helping in Areas Related to Education) sponsored by school nurse Bev Timmons work together to plan and implement much needed programs within the school. This year SHARE recognized the difficulty smokers have in quitting, and therefore sponsored the "juice it up" program (offering gum and juice to students in between classes to fight the desire for a cigarette). SHARE also promoted the smoke out campaign and offered "stop smoking" classes through the American Cancer Society. Peanut Butter Week, held in October, was a community-wide effort to stock area food pantries. The Ho Ho Hotline took place in December around Christmas time. This is an adopt-a-grandparent program where students work in nursing homes with the residents. Together they spoke over the phone to children who wished to talk to Santa Claus before Christmas. After Christmas, students could select a "grandparent" to maintain contact with.

SHARE is important in providing hospitality and friendship. Members volunteered to greet and guide parents on Back-to-School Night and other similiar functions. Also, SHARE takes care not to forget new students. This year they planned a new student breakfast where new students became acquainted with other new students as well as "oldtimers." Another part of the hospitality effort is the Big Brother/Big Sister program, which acquaints freshmen and sophomores with high school. Current East students "adopt" a freshman or a sophomore and maintain contact over the summer with that person after first meeting at an evening similar to Lancer Launch.

Kansas City offers a wide range of volunteer work, and students are able to participate through ESP (Shawnee Mission East Service Project). Those who wish to become involved simply fill out an application choosing what they would like to help out with and the hours that would be convenient. Each volunteer is then assigned a parent adviser who matches the student's schedule with the activity he or she would like to participate in. When the volunteer exceeds 45 hours of service, the parent adviser reports to the counseling center at East, and they record the service on the student's permanent transcript. Volunteer opportunities include working in nursing homes, coaching sports teams, working one-on-one with handicapped, disabled, or abused children, museum staffing, telethons, and much more. Senior Jamie LaPorte said, "It felt good to get close to the kids, to help them, and to see them enjoying themselves even though they were in the hospital — a place they didn't like to be in."

personalized plates run the gamut — from expressions of one's philosophy of life to flippant remarks.

Place yourself in a pea green 1975 Chevy Impala, temporarily stopped at a traffic light. The vehicle claims only 121,000 miles. The fuzzy dice dangling from the rear-view mirror swing back and forth in a hypnotic manner because of the asthmatic wheezing of the car. Eventually you steal a curious glance at the driver next to you.

He is sitting behind the wheel of a black Porsche 911 Carrera. But it's not just a Porsche — it is a lean, mean, driving machine with black tinted windows. Decked in black driving gloves, Porsche aviator glasses and a leather jacket, the driver has his left hand resting on the steering wheel while his right one grips the stick. He looks straight ahead. Then, he slowly twists his head to the side, lowers his shades, and returns the stare. He then pushes the aviator glasses back in place and assumes the take-off position. The light turns green, and the Porsche speeds into the night.

The pea green Impala's headlights outline the four letters: S-T-U-D. You're left wondering if the man in the Porsche would like to think he is a stud or if his car is a stud, or what.

Personalized license plates certainly liven up those Sunday drives. More and more drivers are expressing themselves through license plates. In fact, many of East's drivers are jumping on the bandwagon.

Owners of personalized license plates at East say that a personalized plate can symbolize a person's philosophy of life or even be a smart-alec remark. Senior Matt Gould, owner of a 1987 Honda Accord with CASUAL on the license (his car is known as the "casualmobile"), said, "Casual is a catch-all word for my view of life." Senior Lisa Pazdernik, driver of CMEHITU, agreed that hers was definitely a smart-alec remark. But whether the plate is a flip remark or a personal statement, it is sure to grab the attention of the driving public.

One thing that students with personalized plates decided is that others recognize them more quickly and easily. Senior Jessica Scheibach drives a red Mustang convertible with 664JESS on the back of it. Scheibach said, "People call me that (664JESS); they say, 'Hey, here comes 664JESS.' Other people think it's my phone number; it's not." Drivers recognize senior Scott Smith on the road as HOOPS. Smith said, "People see the HOOPS, and they know I'm in it."

How do students get the idea to get their plates personalized? The mothers of Scheibach and junior Renee Keplinger influenced their decisions. Keplinger said, "My mom got one with her name, Angel, on it, and it seemed neat that she had her very own, so I put RENEE on mine." Scheibach's is also similar to her mother's whose says 674TAMI. Senior Barry Robinson's POTATO 1 may win the prize for originality. Robinson said, "My dad has POTATO on his license because he's in the potato business, and hopefully I will be too some day." But equally original is teacher Trudy Lounds' DULY BOB. Lounds said, "I use the word 'duly bob' so much that I have become known as Duly Bob to others. For instance, I might say I left my duly bob at home or let's go have a duly bob (meaning a pizza). Duly bob is a catch-all word for anything and everything." Senior Sarah Cohen, who drives COHEN 2, said, "Everyone is constantly asking me where COHEN 1 is."

VACATIONS: an investment in memories

Personal preference for vacation spots and available finances vary among East students. Consequently, over vacations such as Spring Break and Christmas Break, students vacation everywhere from Snow Creek to the South of France, from Padre to the Parthenon. But most students agree that it is not necessary to spend a large amount of money to have a memorable and fun vacation.

Because it is nearby, Colorado is a popular vacation spot for skiers. Unfortunately, drivers were sometimes trapped by snowstorms on I-70, in small Kansas towns such as Kanorado, Burlington and Colby. Some students took trips with their families, while others, such as seniors Jeff Miller and Brad Willoughby, went with a group of friends.

Miller recalls one skiing trip in Monarch, Colorado: "Brad was flying down this hill out of control right in front of the ski lodge. As he went by me, I stuck my pole right in front of him, and his left ski hit it, causing him to fly out of his ski bindings and do a complete flip, before tumbling about fifty more yards down the hill. I felt really stupid because all of these people were staring at me, and I really wasn't even trying to make him fall."

Senior Paul Donaghue took a ski trip to Taos, New Mexico. He experienced an embarrassing incident when he really needed to use the bathroom. "I had my Walkman turned up really loud, so I couldn't hear anything else. I ran into the bathroom and went right into a stall. I turned my Walkman off and I heard some ladies' voices in the bathroom with me. I quickly realized that I had selected the wrong bathroom. I ended up sitting in there about ten minutes until everyone else had left before I came back out. The only person that saw me was a friend of mine who I was skiing with, so I wasn't really that embarrassed."

When asked about favorite vacation spots, students favored combing the beach to skiing the slopes. For those that preferred the beach to the Rockies, their vacations ranged from Padre Island to Hawaii. Because of the cost, few could afford to go to Hawaii over Spring Break with their friends, but several students traveled there this year with their parents over Christmas break. Junior Kirsten Binda went for a walk her first morning after arriving there. She was still not very familiar with the territory, however, when she returned to her family's hut. "I kept banging on the door, but no one answered, so I started yelling for them to let me in. Unfortunately, I was banging on the door of the House of Pleasant Dreams, which was next door to the House of Running Water where we were staying. The lady that finally came to the door was not too happy with me for waking her up."

Money is a problem for many students when trying to arrange a spring break trip with their friends, but there are several ways to overcome this problem. Many students earned the money by working last summer or during the school year, and some students got some financial help from their parents. Also by grouping large numbers of people in one room together, students can save a little money. Many East students traveling to the Bahamas over Spring Break used this tactic. People traveling in large groups also got big discounts at resorts. In this way, organizations like church youth groups and the senior ski trip made it possible for students to travel with their friends and save some money also.

Seniors Robert Dunn and Tim Doan managed to put together an inexpensive vacation. The two drove to North Carolina but stayed with relatives along the way. At the very start of their trip, things started to go wrong. As Doan explains it, "We stopped to buy gas in a small gas station in Missouri. We forgot to take the hose out of the gas tank when we drove off. It ripped the nozzle off the hose. What a way to start the vacation!" Dunn and Doan made it past the first day, but later in the trip "Robert's Chevette would not start. Some guy in a gas station showed us how to start it, so every time it would not start he had to connect these wires with a screwdriver. I sat in the car and turned the ignition switch, so all I ever saw was a lot of sparks flying." Doan added, "We also stopped at the biggest McDonald's in the world somewhere in Ohio."

With college quickly approaching, seniors and some juniors took trips with their parents to see schools. Many students sought admission into very competitive schools and wanted to visit those schools before making a final decision. Trips to the east coast were fairly common to visit Ivy League schools located in New England. The University of Kansas was a popular and convenient spot for roadtrips on weekends, though not necessarily to check out the academics.

To some, a vacation is the best way to get away from the pressures of school and have a good time with family and friends. Vacations could be viewed as status symbols displaying wealth and worldliness, but very few students think of them this way. The stories and memories that develop from a vacation seem to be much more valuable than the money invested.

In addition to doing loads of homework given every night, many East students have gone out to find more work. In doing so, they have learned more about the "real world."

Senior Lance Pell made mowing lawns a business. He expanded his business by word of mouth and advertising. Pell advertised some in newspapers, and when starting a new area, he took flowers and flyers to people's houses. Last summer, he worked seven days a week on 52 lawns. "Next year though I hope to have 75 to 100 lawns," said Pell. As a part of expanding and organizing his business, Pell bought a computer. Next summer he plans to hire three workers to help him out. Covering lawns from Leawood to Mission Hills to 143rd and Mission Road, his job keeps him on the go. Pell finds that "the worst part is that it gets boring. Also they (his workers) sometimes loaf, and I end up doing the work." During the winter, he works at Granny's, a chicken restaurant in Corinth.

Another job that attracts students during the summer is lifeguarding. Sophomore Michelle Watkins works at Prairie Village Pool. After a month and a half of training, she is set to work. Watkins said, "Talking and meeting lots of people is my favorite part of the job." However, she admits that lifeguarding does not only consist of fun in the sun, but it also can include cleaning out bathrooms or dealing with irate members.

Senior Karin Denes worked during the school year for her father at his answering service. Working for her father, she said, had benefits and disadvantages. "My father expects me to be a model, and he got angry when I was late once, which he might not have done to the others. However, after working for two months last summer, I got to go on a vacation, even though you usually can't go until you have worked for a year. So it evens out." Denes' job ranges from answering phones for businessmen to answering calls for narcotics anonymous. "Talking to the variety of people that call is the most rewarding part of the job," said Denes.

Working at Payless as a produce checker and stocker, Senior Lee Paige learned how to deal with people. He said, "You make friends as well as earn money. It's a social thing and something you have to do. I've learned to get along with and understand people (customers) even if they're wrong. Sometimes customers put a high priority on what they want, and that is annoying. You have to learn what to do about that."

With a regimen of going to work at 4:45 and returning home at 11:30 on weeknights or home at 1:30 on weekends, Michelle Ghiselli said, "By the time you're home from waiting tables, you're physically exhausted." Ghiselli worked at Tippins for three months, waiting on tables and cleaning up after closing. Ghiselli commented on the rewards and the problems of working: "The money is great, but the work is really physically demanding. The big problems are always having to have a smile on your face and being polite, no matter what people say, and learning all of the menu." In addition, she said, "You have to work harder in school. I always received good grades with very little effort. Now, I have to work. You also have to deal with less sleep."

Inspite of the adversities that come with working, Ghiselli has continued. "I feel I am taking on responsibilities such as paying for gas and becoming independent. I don't need my parents to bail me out. It helps you grow up." She eventually quit working at Tippins and started working at the Jones Store Co., where she found the pace greatly reduced. However, Ghiselli thought she might return to waiting tables in college.

Working students took the time to find jobs and stick with them. As a result they have learned the sense of accomplishment and accepted the problems that come with earning money. However, they have also discovered that different jobs are attractive in different ways, and people must choose not just a job, but the right job.

on a cool day in December, a group of East students were given a chance to participate in a rally against the way Jews are being treated in the Soviet Union . . .

TALK IS CHEAP

An East student in the 1960's probably had many opportunities to express his views about causes, such as the Vietnam War or Civil Rights. However, in the 1980's, demonstrations which include signs, marching, and songs about peace have become very scarce. But on a cool day in December, a group of students from East were given a rare chance to participate in a rally against the way Jews are being treated in the Soviet Union. A Kansas City delegation containing over three hundred people, including fourteen East students, ventured to Washington D.C. to join 200,000 supporters of Soviet Jewry from all around the nation.

In the USSR, Jews are strongly persecuted. Not only are they not allowed to practice their religion, but the Soviet government also denies Jews' requests to escape the country and find religious freedom elsewhere. When a Jew submits his request to leave the Soviet Union, he will immediately lose his job and may even be sent to a Siberian prison under false charges.

"It was sad to hear them talk about all of the people who couldn't get out," reflected junior Mark Pakula, referring to famous dissidents Natan Scharansky and Ida Nudel, speakers at the rally who had finally been released from Russia after years of waiting. A line-up of "who's who" in politics joined the newly freed Russians on the platform. Included were Vice President George Bush, New York mayor Ed Koch, presidential candidate from New York, Jack Kemp, and countless other senators and representatives. Every speaker made strong statements that the United States should be doing more about the persecution of Soviet Jews. "If they really cared, they would act," accused sophomore Leslie Pakula. "Talking is easy, but doing something about it takes effort."

"It is unrealistic to think that we can get every single Jew out of Russia," explained sophomore Jessica Czarlinsky. Sophomore Hannah Cummings added, "I hope that Gorbachev and Reagan know that we cared enough to march for the freedom of Soviet Jews." Attracting the attention of the superpower leaders was the main goal for most of East's marchers. The East students who attended the rally in Washington were seniors Mark Chapman, Wayne Spritz, and Aaron Tornberg; juniors Heather Alderman, Jay Lewis, and Mark Pakula; sophomores Becky Boresow, Hannah Cummings, Jessica Czarlinsky, Lori Goldberg, Faythe Mutchnick, and Leslie Pakula; and freshmen Sarah Boresow and Shoshie Tornberg.

Mark Pakula said, "The best part of the day was arriving in Washington and seeing two hundred thousand people united for one cause." Despite the lack of a response from Gorbachev, almost everyone who participated felt that some good had been accomplished. "We (Jews) were the majority for a day," said Leslie Pakula. "And maybe we can make a difference when we are all together."

FUTURISTICS

Media analyses which start to appear towards the end of every decade suggest that the 10 year span was dominated by one set of goals and ideals, by one type of person.

The 1960's were widely acclaimed as the age of free love and denial of materialism. For many, the 80's were the years of the Yuppie: that Young Urban Professional with money, fancy suits, and fast cars. Yuppies seemed to dominate not only the finances but also the morality of the times. They advocated a lifestyle that, for many, was too fast paced for marriage, commitment, and certainly children.

But if the results of a recent poll taken at SM East are any indication, the Yuppie is on the way out. The pool was distributed to several study halls and other random classes earlier in the year and asked a variety of questions relating to values and lifestyles.

Seventy-five percent of students polled replied that either love or happiness was the most important aspect of life for them. Three percent listed financial security as their prime goal and only 1%, wealth. This seems to run contrary to the Yuppie goals of exuberant wealth and free and easy living.

Yet East students are not free from the influence of some Yuppie values, however modified they may be. Sixty-six percent of female students polled replied that they planned to have children, but only after a career, and 15% replied that their career would take priority in their lives. Yet a fairly large 19% would allow children to take precedence over a career.

But for those women who want it all: a career, a family, and children, it will be difficult to gain cooperation from the husband. Only 38% of male students polled would be willing to take care of the children while their wives worked. The remaining women must hope to sway some of the 41% who were undecided on the issue.

Perhaps one of the more surprising statistics was that 22% of students polled replied that they did not believe in premarital sex, and another 22% replied that it would depend on the circumstances. Only 51% believed in premarital sex.

Overall, however, the results fell in line with many of the local and national opinions on subjects. Ninety-eight percent of those polled want at least a four year college education with 58% having amibitions to attend graduate school, statistics which are in line with the high emphasis East places on education and academic success. Sixty-two percent of students polled replied that they did not approve of recreational drug use. Although this figure is incredibly high compared to national statistics, it agrees with recent anti-drug ad campaigns aimed at middle-class teenagers.

The poll indicated that East students are far more than the spoiled, rich brats they are so often perceived to be. It shows that, while they have high career and educational goals, they haven't lost sight of the human side of life. They represent a less selfish society of the future soon to replace Yuppies as a dominant sociological force.

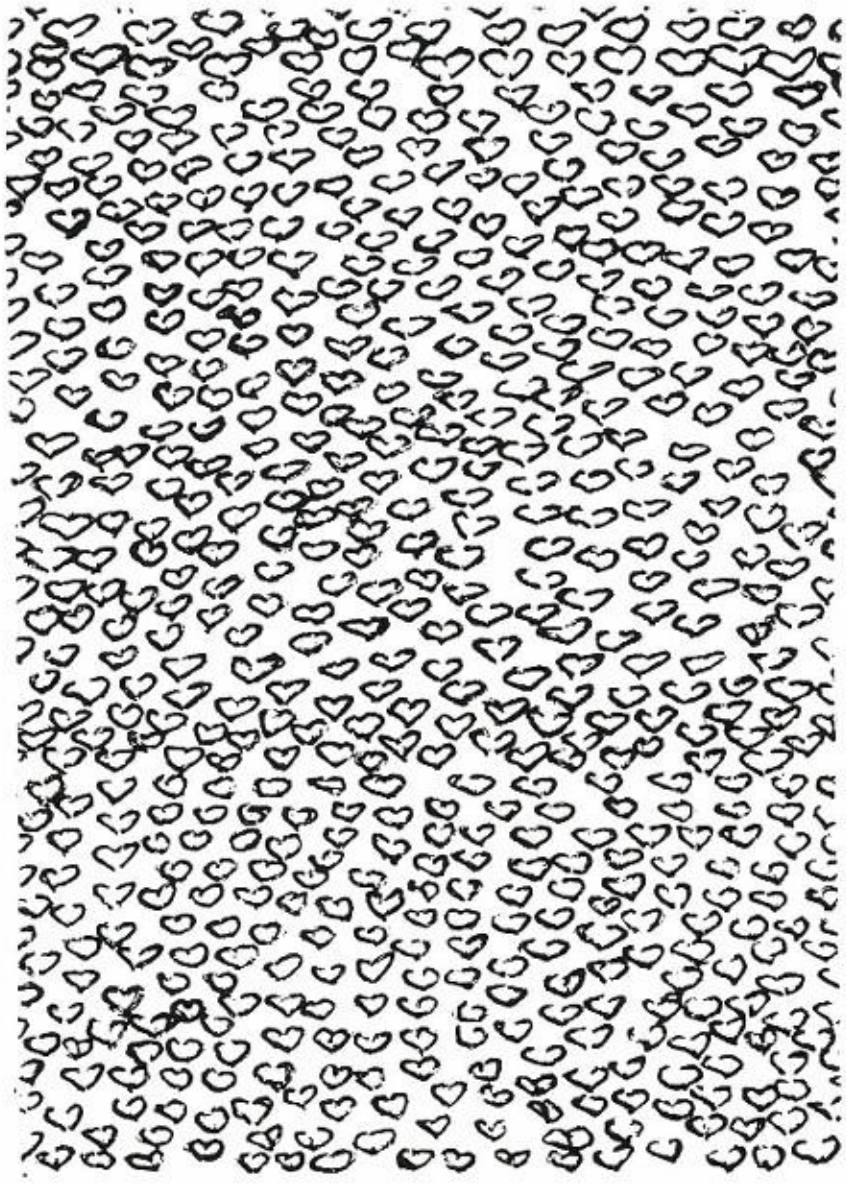
OODLES OF DOODLES



Senior Shana Stephens filled an entire sheet of notebook paper with hearts during trig. class.

WHAT DO THEY MEAN?

It all begins as an innocent squiggle on the edge of your paper. With a little work, it becomes an ornate, flowing design, cascading along the margin. Is this the beginning of a masterpiece of artwork? No — it's the doodle in the margin of your English notes. But what is a doodle? What does it mean? According to The American Heritage Dictionary, a doodle is "a scribble, design or figure drawn absent-mindedly." More than this, a doodle can reveal what the "absent mind" is thinking.

"Examining doodles is a very projective or interpretive thing," said psychology teacher Bill Stiegemeier. "They might mean something important, or they may not mean anything at all. It all depends on how closely you are able to study them." In most cases, doodles may simply divulge what is on your immediate conscious mind. Still, examining your doodles may uncover some of your general unconscious tendencies and characteristics.

For instance, according to Stiegemeier, who has spent a great deal of time studying analyses of drawings, those who are interested in intellectual endeavors might doodle words, whereas artistics people favor sketches. In such sketches, angular or straight lines may reveal tenseness or anxiety, whereas wavy drawings tend to signify relaxation. Outward spirals are often the mark of extroverts, and inward spirals identify introverts. Your perception of human nature can be seen in doodles of faces, based on the detail of facial features such as beards, wrinkles and expressions. If you're an orderly person and have an intolerance for chaos, your doodles are probably symmetrical and neat. Drawings of vehicles may mean you are seeking an escape or answer for a recent concern. Doodles incorporating many dots or closed circles could reveal a suspicious aspect of human nature. Finally, while doodles of arrows may display ambition and direction, they may represent confusion if it is unclear what they are pointing to.

Although all of these interpretations are very general, it may yet be interesting to take a second look at all of those doodles you've collected throughout your academic career and perhaps learn something new about yourself.

During first semester, one topic is upmost in the minds of seniors applying to colleges. Expecting their last year of high school to be a blow-off, seniors were rudely disillusioned at the work required of them. For example, senior Jennifer Cavitt said, "Being a senior is totally different than I thought. You think it's going to be carefree, and then you get to the point where you have to write a lot of essays for college applications and almost don't want to apply." Similarly, senior Brent Butcher said, "Everyone thinks that their senior year will be a blow-off, but they end up having to work on about eight college applications."

With frustration often comes criticism. After trying to sort through the tangled web of financial aid questions, Butcher said, "It's a hastle, a headache — filling out dumb questions that contradict each other." To solve this irritant, he plans (when he grows older), "to become rich and send ten kids to college so they will not have to fill out financial aid questionaires." Senior Danny Dees also dislikes the paper work. He said, "The essays are a pain, and you have to put your address down so many times. You get bogged down and don't have time for homework."

Some students question the accuracy of the admissions process. Sabra Gibbens said, "You have to do tricks and superficial things to get into a college. The admission process has turned into a lottery rather than an academic process." Cavitt, however, said "Being nervous about SAT's is the biggest pain. Considering that I took it twice and there was a 170 point difference, I don't think it's really accurate."

Students at East, for various reasons, are discovering that they really do have to keep up their grades. Senior Kristen Strongman said, "I didn't take the ACT as seriously because I had already been accepted to K-State, but I still want to keep my grade average up for rush." In agreement Sabra Gibbens said, "People have been working and trying to keep grades high both last year and this year. Everything is intensified." Seniors have realized that with graduation come new responsibilities, decisions, and changes, and it is up to the individual to take advantage of the opportunities being presented.

the competitive edge

Competition — the word strikes fear in some hearts, causes a restlessness in others, and agitates even more to search out the best in themselves. Shawnee Mission East is almost synonymous with this concept of competition. From outstanding sports teams to fine plays and concerts to high enrollment in honors courses, competition surfaces as an indicator of the strong desires on the part of many students at East to learn and grow at a higher level than some of their peers.

When asked about the competitiveness at East, Dr. Corky Jacobs, Associate Principal, replied, "It's necessary to prepare you for life. If you can accept defeats and failure, you will go on and excel in whatever you do. People who are willing to take risks are eventually going to come out the winners because how can you win if you didn't even try?" Senior Sarah Rooney echoed this same philosophy: "Competition is more on a personal basis at East. It's up to you to get involved." Other students also find East's general atmosphere "very highly competitive and sometimes hard to be 'with it' all the time." These varied statements mirror the feelings of many East students who have chosen to be actively involved.

Sports, for example, provide an intense avenue for competition for many students. Troy Duncan said, "In football, you are competing against other schools and with members of your own team for the best positions. It's hard to constantly be trying to impress both the other schools and your own coaches. I felt that the competition between players was just as equal in practice as on a game day." It is this inter and intra-squad competition that has been a successful formula for Lancer sports teams for many years. East's teams, such as Girls' Golf, Boys' Basketball, and both Girls' and Boys' Swimming have consistantly ranked high at both Regional and State competitions. "It's part of our nature," states Dr. Jacobs; "we are competitive beings and it just becomes a way of life."

It's the best way I can think of to express yourself," recounted Linda Stratton, sophomore, on why she puts herself out in the line of fire for auditions in drama and music. "When I climbed up on the stage and prepared to sing my song for the musical auditions, a wave of all the great experiences I remembered from last year's musical gave me the confidence I needed to do well." The music department is not alone in setting high standards. A stroll past the student art gallery at East shows evidence of the artistic abilities of many Lancer artists. Musical ability or talent in drawing or photography is not enough for long. Practice and more practice honed those talents and gave these students the edge and the opportunity to test themselves and ultimately to succeed.

With a high enrollment in honors classes, one of the greatest areas of competition, particularly at East, is grades. Dr. Jacobs said, "I get discouraged sometimes because of the intensity of competition academically. I feel that the competition should be between the students and the body of knowledge supplied to them, not student against student as is often the case." East offers many honors classes in English, social studies, math, and science and seems always to fill honors teachers' schedules with students. Indeed, there are many teachers at East who are seldom involved with any other students except those in honors courses. These numbers indicate that the competitive spirit in academia is strong, and achievement in those areas is equally high and impressive.

Perhaps the spirit of competition is most effective if it is kept in balance. When competition is not the main force driving the participant, when the spirit of competition is maintained and checked, and when achievement is noted, then competition has a positive strength. Competition in its purest form is at its best when the participant competes only against himself. Said Dr. Jacobs, "Competition, when kept in the proper perspective, can be accepted in the spirit of learning." Competition ... inspires many, relegates a few to the rear ranks, but always is present and active.

WOMEN OF '88

Yes, women should be equal, but it's nice to have doors opened for you. This is how the majority of females at Shawnee Mission East feel about women's lib. Few people are very sure exactly where the feminist movement is going, or how far it should go. Nineteen eighty-eight is a year of transition and confusion for women. Half want to remain traditional, and half are eager to use their assertiveness in the business world. But what about guys? Do we still let them handle all the initiating of dates and relationships, or should we take the first step? That little voice still lurks, "I don't want him to think I'm too aggressive." What do guys want? These questions and more were asked in a poll taken by junior and senior girls.

Many times a woman will plan her career according to whether or not she wants children. Eighty-nine percent of the females do plan to have kids. A major moral dilemma today debates the influence of two working parents on a child's development. Forty-nine percent from this survey say they want to maintain a flexible part-time job or career, and 30% plan to stay home when their children are under the age of five. When their children are over the age of five, 59% want a flexible career and 25% a full-time job. Only 2% said they would remain homemakers after their children went to school. Seniors Susan Walden and Stephanie Sawyer plan to work at home. Sawyer added she would like to "be a freelance artist while having and raising children and then when they're grown up, maybe a more time-consuming job." For those who don't plan to have kids, half want a full-time career and half a flexible one. Senior Jessica Schiebach, who would like a full-time career, said, "My career will always come first. I did not work this hard to sit around and have babies." She did add that she may eventually want to have a child, just not too soon. Thirty-nine percent think working moms will have a positive effect on children, primarily because it will teach them independence and responsibility. Thirty-two percent say the opposite, that children need the guidance of their parents, and when both parents are consumed with their careers, the children do not receive the amount of attention they need, especially at a young age. The remainder feel that children tend to adapt to any situation, and that the growing number of working moms will have no significant effect.

Housework and househusbands — what to do? Fifty-seven percent think husbands and wives should share the household responsibilities at the convenience of the other. Another 35% of the women think they should split everything 50/50. Senior Liz Berry stresses an important part of a relationship: "There are always going to be times when someone can't do what they're supposed to or expected to — FLEXIBILITY is important." In the same light, Senior Lisa Starke said, "A home is a place of give and take, not 50/50 exactly." Senior Suzanne Jones looks at equality another way: "If he works, I'll take care of the house." Forty-five percent of the girls were neutral on working to support the family and having the husband maintain the home. The basic attitude: "If I wanted to work and he wanted to stay home, and it was successful, it would be fine." Forty-eight percent prefer residential life as opposed to the 33% who would like to live in a fast-paced, large city. Senior Kris Dean's choice: "A place where I'm close to the city and to the ocean."

Dating — what a mess! For the first time in history, women are finally discovering how difficult it is to ask a man out. Women have to worry not only about being rejected, but also about being too aggressive or too timid and how the guy responds to more liberal women. Only 20% of the females interviewed feel confident about asking a guy out while 57% worry about being too assertive. Some girls said they wouldn't mind asking someone out, but would rather be asked. The majority said they would insist on paying if they (the women) had initiated a date, and also said they will offer to pay but let the guy foot the bill on a date that he initiated. Dutch is becoming more popular, but it's hard to approach at times. An overwhelming majority thinks guys prefer the confident but more traditional women as opposed to the assertive or shy ones. Most girls think they fall into this confident-traditional category, but many others think they appear very shy. "C'mon guys, ask us out more often! Take some risks, just do it!" That's what the girls are saying. An anonymous senior added, "It seems that guys are afraid of getting 'attached,' but they don't realize that lots of girls would just love a fun date. It doesn't mean you're getting married." Girls would like dating to be a more casual thing, and if guys would too, someone needs to start changing the system. In addition, senior Beth Calvet said, "I think that there should be more male/female friendships. Both sexes tend to treat the other as a member of the opposite sex, not as friends."

The survey works out almost 50/50 between women who say they consider themselves a feminist or a women's libber, and those who do not. There are still many quirks to the connotation of women's lib that females must work out for themselves. Senior Betsy Nofsinger explained, "My life is mine and I am capable of controlling it, but I don't think that is feminist."

The overall attitude towards women's lib is lukewarm. Unisex jobs, money, and opportunities are fine, but unisex bathrooms may be a little much. Women feel independent and self-sufficient, but they would still like to be treated with the same courtesy of the past. Senior Beth Stopperan said, " . . . but it's nice to have doors opened for you."

MEN OF '88

Womens' Lib — these words provoke a wide range of reactions from the men of today, including scorn, fear, ambivalence, and praise. The feminist movement is over twenty years old, and it has greatly influenced the thinking of men in the United States. Thirty years ago, men expected their wives to raise the kids, maintain the home, and sacrifice any career pursuit for the sake of the family. Times have changed. Now, the husband who would rather go hungry than prepare a meal for himself is more the exception than the rule.

The wild world of dating has also been affected by Womens' Lib. More and more women are asking men out and are more aggressive in their pursuit of men. Also, the once clear-cut issue of paying for dates has become a perplexing problem. Should a man always insist on paying for his date, or will the woman be offended by this if she is a feminist? The situation becomes even more muddled when the woman initiates the date.

Women's Lib has brought about change in the family, the job market, and the dating scene. But has the movement run its course, or will it cause continued reform in the future? S.M. East male juniors and seniors participated in a poll concerning the feminist movement.

The results of the poll seemed to indicate, with a few exceptions, an increasing acceptance of most aspects of Womens' Lib. For example, 88% of the men polled anticipated that their future wives would either have a flexible job or a full-time career. Explanations for these responses ranged from senior John Paul Fogel's, "I would let my wife decide for herself what she would like to do. A marriage should never be a restriction. It should be an opportunity," to senior Peter Braude's, "I wouldn't like to marry some chick that would just sponge off me. I figure the more money my wife makes, the less I'll have to."

However, many of the men said they would like their wives to quit working while their children were under the age of five, and then return to either a full-time or part-time career. A large percentage of those polled felt that none of the answers offered was acceptable; as senior Todd Underwood explained it, "These questions are impossible to answer because a large part of it has to do with my wife's wishes. I refuse to decide specific details about the life of someone I don't know yet."

Although the vast majority of the men polled expected their wives to work, they expressed strong reservations about the possibility of staying home with the kids while their wives supported the family financially. Eighty-four percent were either neutral or disagreed with the idea. Also, the majority of the men (56%) felt that the growing number of working moms would have a negative effect on children. Senior Brad Meara explained, "The parental influence will be lost. The children will be a product of the babysitter instead of the parents."

The men were also asked to respond to questions concerning dating. The results seemed to show that men are readily accepting the idea of women asking them out. In fact, 73% said women should be confident about asking them out, and 63% wished girls would ask guys out more often. The men seemed to contradict themselves, however, when 68% said they like confident but more traditional women, while only 23% preferred assertive women. On the subject of paying for dates, most men still insist on supplying the funds for a date they initiated, and on going dutch on a date the woman initiated.

Finally, when asked if they had any further comments, the most common response came in the form of expressions of frustration with women in general. Junior Darren Kennedy responded with a bit of advice for the female gender: "Don't mess up my life any more. Be honest and friendly. Please look beyond the looks."

TALKIN' TURKEY

Tomorrow and tomorrow and tomorrow . . ." gobble, gobble, gobble . . . "creeps in this petty pace," lectures English teacher Donna Skates. Skates, as well as several other teachers near the north ramp, no longer has to contend with distractions from the smoking lounge, but from the turkeys and ducks living in the new ecological preserve.

Although the area doesn't look particularly organized at present, the nameless turkeys are only the beginning of what is hoped to be an extensive biological study area. With funding from the District Science Department, the outdoor laboratory has already received two turkeys and several ducks. In the spring, the turkeys and ducks will be joined by more birds, gardens, and stock tanks where native fish will be raised. The plants and animals will primarily be the responsibility of the student naturalists and other biology students. Development of the area is an ongoing project which will not be completed for many years.

The outdoor laboratory is an ideal place for conducting environmental research. Throughout the year, the biology teachers will be setting up various experiments while the students record data. One of the studies will focus on ecological succession. By allowing a section of the yard to grow undisturbed, students can learn how different plants establish themselves in a competitive environment. Another study will examine what kinds of grasses and wildflowers grow best in this climate.

The preserve has proven to be popular among students and teachers alike. According to biology teacher Jim Lockard, "The critters, which are used for tours of the department, are favorites of visiting grade school kids." In general, the laboratory is also praised by the student body. "It's much more pleasant to look out the window and see green grass instead of cement," commented senior Leslie Grant. For the staff, the preserve has helped to relax the atmosphere of the north ramp area, where the teachers' lounge is located. Social studies teacher John Nickels has developed an especially friendly relationship with the turkeys. "Me and the big guy are buddies," Nickels joked. "We talk when I'm on lunchroom duty."

the struggle between past and future:

THE BEST OF BOTH

1988 — A year of struggle between moving and lingering in the past, a mixture of classic rock and roll and new wave pop, along with jean jackets and minis from the fifties and black and white styles of the eighties. It's an abundant time for traveling and eating, then dieting and staying in shape. The scene of entertainment is a diverse one, ranging from prayer meetings to stoner parties. It's a year of discovery and advancement with a gentle touch of sentiment in losing the romanticism of the past.

Fashion is usually the biggest trademark of a specific year or period of time. Pictures, in that case, are worth a thousand words. It's a wonder what our children and grandchildren will think of our statements in fashion. "I can't believe you wore something that ugly. That's really embarrassing, Mom. Were you a big nerd or what?" "No way, Dad, your car only got 30 miles to the gallon? That's a bummer. Life must have been really tough, huh?" No matter what they'll think, this is our year for style. Natural, earthy tones are in: brown boots, leather jackets, and cream counterparts. The so-called "thrashers" are back in black, with tattered t-shirts and beat up army jackets. The entire black outfit is now moving to all levels of the fashion strata in various levels of taste. To accompany the short mini skirts, some girls purposely run their hose to achieve a sexier look. Form fitting sweater skirts and other knits are common to show off the bodies so many girls work so hard to get. For guys, the style seems relatively simple, a pair of Levi's and a jacket: jean, leather, or letter, and they're set. The short hair and clean cut look is back, especially at East, the so-called home of the conservatives. Catalog marketing is growing in popularity with J. Crew clothes and LL Bean "blucher" shoes hitting the halls. College life is slipping into high school with a variety of Greek and university sweatshirts, and occasional rush parties for some senior guys. Jewelry is in vogue from cheap silver to diamond rings. Although our lifestyle seems a bit similar to the fifties, the standard of living and freedom among teenagers has drastically changed.

It's no wonder our parents can hardly relate to rush parties on weeknights, or paying for hotel rooms after prom or other big events. Not only do many of them not relate, many of them do not allow. But for others the restrictions aren't so tough, and teenagers are maturing at younger and younger ages. Now teenagers don't simply go to the drive-in or to the roller rink for entertainment, but spend loads of money on rock concerts or fancy dinners; even a movie costs $4.50 per person. The dollar movie is gone forever since it was raised to $1.25. What parent ever thought of sending his child to the Bahamas for a senior spring break or to Europe for a few months during the summer? Fortunately, a few retain the love of a bargain, like juniors Darren Kennedy and Doug Kandt who search the thrift shops for a good deal. If our parents are amazed at our extravagance, what will our children expect?

Food has its own popularity trends. Some specific examples include frozen yogurt and Mexican and Chinese food. Bo Ling's Chinese restaurant is a nice place to get a bite, and every Monday is Taco Night at Dos Hombres. No one can pass up K.C.'s famous barbecue, so Haywards and Gates remain a tradition. The all-time classic in teenage food is pizza — anytime anywhere, any pizza (although we have our favorites.)

The health-conscious population is growing rapidly as more and more young people try to eat right and exercise. Aerobics is the newest trend among high school students; an aerobics class at East had its premier this year. This is generally still limited to females since guys are sticking with weights and running. Television aerobics and Jane Fonda VHS tapes are good ways to exercise at home.

Television soaps such as Knots Landing, Moonlighting, and L.A. Law are big this year along with Oprah and Win, Lose or Draw, a game show similar to Pictionary. Only the fall-out from Vanna White's popularity from her playboy scandal remains for the Wheel of Fortune. Jeopardy will always be a hit with junior honors English teacher, Bill Boley.

Entertainment. Some say Kansas City is boring. Others who moved here from small towns think it's fast-paced and full of excitement. Perhaps our perspective is somewhat limited since places like Westport are off limits to most of us. Whatever the case may be, we always find something to do. Roe Park has been a big hangout when nothing else catches our interest. Usually one can find a party each weekend, and won't hesitate to drive many miles to get there. Some cozier dates include ice skating at Crown Center, carriage rides at the Plaza, especially during the holidays, and simple evenings at home with a rented movie at hand. The Arch and Nelson Art Gallery used to be popular until the police caught on and blocked off the area. K-Life, Young Life and other religious organizations are growing as they provide a stable place for self-exploration and fellowship. The U2 concert was one of the biggest events of the year: Kemper Arena was sold out in a matter of hours, and many hopeful fans were left without tickets.

1988 is a time of struggle between the past and the future. Women are stuck in a difficult period of transition. Yes, we want equal pay, equal status and equal treatment, but what do we do when relating to guys? Should we really ask them out and pay for dates? The guys are stuck too as they're not sure whether to let the girls pay or not. Women's lib and other independent movements of the eighties are pushing us farther and farther away from the gentle quaintness of the past. Rambo and Lethal Weapon will never measure up to the classic black and white movies of the early twentieth century. Family life is rapidly changing with working parents, high divorce rates, and day care centers. At home, the familiar sound is not conversation but the click, click, click of the remote cable control. America is beginning to leave many of its Puritan values behind. Some find this new fast-paced lifestyle inspiring and challenging while others view it with sobering thoughts. Whatever our view, we are the age to experience the best of both worlds, a bit of the romantic past and the beginning of the future.

CHANGES

FRESHMAN! The word reeks of insults of immaturity and insecurity. Freshmen are stereotyped as little twits with zits and underdeveloped bodies who have no business relating to the rest of the high school population. Senior, on the other hand, carries some magical message of awe. Seniors are so old! They can drive and vote, and they used to be able to drink! Seniors can do anything they want — stay out all night, go anywhere without their parents, and beat up on freshmen. Whether this holds true is irrelevant; we wouldn't want to spoil the freshmen's hopes. The high school years are times of confusion and fun, elaborated with intense emotion. But how did these seniors become so awesome? They were once freshmen too!

Entering high school is an opportune time for meeting and making new friends. All its newness can make one a bit insecure and on guard to the impressions he delivers. Gently, through the years, each person finds his niche, the group he or she best gets along with. Although many people don't like to categorize themselves or others, each person gains a basic reputation: jock, prep, punker, thrasher, goody-goody, druggy, etc. As long as one is happy with his friends, his social life flows fairly smoothly. Somehow, by the senior year, the pressures of newness and excitement have worn off, and a familiarity of friendships has settled in. Relationships are calmer, closer, and more easy-going. The senior class realizes they have one particular concern in common, the future. Hype about college, college applications, and the work load of the senior year often dominates conversations. When seniors rule the school in Student Council, Pep Club, drama, and varsity sports, a sense of confidence adds to their relaxed attitude. Perhaps the attitude becomes too relaxed as the ever-feared SENIORITIS attacks each student.

Senioritis is a term for the inability and lack of motivation to do homework. Many hard-working, grade-conscious underclassmen believe senioritis will never affect them, but little do they know. Senioritis isn't as deadly as it seems; many students shooting for ivy league or other competitive colleges can't afford to back off. It's not impossible to stick with it, just difficult. For those who choose to stay tough, AP classes become more and more intellectual. Students surprise themselves with debates, discussions, abstract thinking, and opinions, providing a different atmosphere for a classroom. No matter how good the student, everyone becomes a better writer and reader, and develops a sound basis of knowledge for further education. During this process of becoming book smart, experiences in relationships and dealing with people enhance our people smarts. Those who have the opportunity to travel abroad or to other parts of the country gain a broadened perspective of the world and other ways of life. Striking out alone leads to self-understanding. These types of valuable experiences are routes to the higher levels of maturity seniors begin to possess.

Another major influence upon our personality development is dating. Many high school students have at least one long-term, serious love relationship. Whether it results in an emotional break-up, good break-up, or no break-up at all, the experience is usually beneficial. Many who go through an intense separation full of misunderstanding and depression find themselves more independent and self-confident when it is all over. Good break-ups provide a positive outlook on relationships for the future, and couples who stay together develop good communication skills and a system of give and take. Whichever the case, experience reigns with a feeling of what to look for and expect in the future.

Four years is a long time. Although it seems to pass very quickly, a lot is packed into these crucial years. Some people change drastically as a result of certain tragedies or inspiring events. Others appear the same outwardly but have developed a more complex and mature interior. All our experiences, accomplishments and failures establish our personalities and identities and bring us to a better understanding of ourselves and others. There are pros and cons to growing up. Losing the innocence of childhood can be bittersweet, but having the capability to make our own decisions and create our own success is very rewarding. Seniors are dispersing in many different directions, and soon high school will become only a memory. We are leaving with hopes for the future and love for our friends who have helped us through the past four years. Everyone has experienced the confusion and insecurity of entering high school — walking into the wrong class, failing to find the right locker, or tripping down the stairs. But somehow, through the miracle of time, we have grown from a freshman twit to one of those awesome seniors.

Encompassed by mounds of papers, Judy Barnes tackles her work with indefatigable enthusiam. Barnes juggles academics, family life, and an honest interest in her students. (photo by Suzanne Jones)

A DAY IN THE LIFE:

JUDY BARNES

Utter chaos. That's all there is to it. This is a woman who never stops. At approximately 5:02 a.m. each morning, her cat Symba walks over her face demanding to be fed. After feeding the cat, Judy Barnes crawls back into bed only to be reawakened at 5:30 by her teenage daughter taking a shower. From then on, it's non-stop.

"I have my usual health food for breakfast — doughnuts, T.J. Cinnamon rolls I buy at the warehouse, and hot tea. I love hot tea — drink it all the time. I have my supply of tea bags in my desk drawer at school, along with my Hershey Kisses and those chocolate Toblerones. I have to eat all day to keep going.

"I arrive at school about, oh . . . 7:22," she giggles. "You can say that I never arrive early. First and second hour I basically hang out in the library. I'm the English division coordinator, so I have an extra planning period for meeting. Then I have my senior A.P. classes — I've really got to be prepared for these people. Then we have what we call 'lunch 101.' Several of my students eat lunch with me in my room; Todd Underwood brings his guitar to entertain us.

"Each day after school there are students in my room for help with college essays or book checks. I really do have fun with it though. So I go home about 4:15 in the afternoon. I guess that makes up for arriving a bit late in the morning." Mrs. Barnes is continually bombarded with things to do. By the middle of January, she had already written 85 college recommendations, discounting any February deadlines. She also takes two seminars per quarter, things like stress management and sex education. It's hilarious to hear her talk about them in class.

Like most teachers, Mrs. Barnes has quite an active life outside of school. She said, "I don't cook. We eat out, or I make Barney and Amy eat T.V. dinners. I cook sometimes, I guess, just not very often. I eat in these little bits all day." When asked if she ever exercises she said, "Well, I worry, I pace, does that count? I also walk two miles every night and hop around our little tramp. Barney and I have to fight over that.

"Then I spend an hour and a half or so grading papers and studying for the next day. My biggest hobby is puzzles. I love big jigsaw puzzles. I have to keep them in my basement because Symba eats the pieces. I just work on them by myself — no one will help me!" she laughs.

"Of course Amy and I have our little conversations every night. We quarrel about small things like hair and clothes for fun. She accuses me of lurking outside her bedroom door and listening to her phone conversations. One time she opened the door, and there I was. I was really just putting some towels in the closet, but she wouldn't believe me. We really have fun though; we are so identical. Barney can't understand how I have produced this clone of myself. Sometimes we'll look at each other and just say 'Let's go shopping.' We go probably three or four times a week just to browse and get those giant chocolate chip cookies."

On the weekends, Mr. and Mrs. Barnes go out a lot. "Every Saturday night we do something: go to a movie, go to a party, get together with our friends. Every Saturday I have lunch with my friends, too. I love parties and rock n' roll-the Eagles. And of course I have my Robert Redford fantasy. I used to think Jim Morrison was so cool until he got chubby and into drugs. I always hated Elvis Presley though."

Mrs. Barnes has a phobia of heights and flying that her classes know all about. She said, "I am scared to death to fly. I always have these visions of crashes and know we are going to die each time we get ready to land. We never have. I have flown to Hawaii and other places. They had to sedate me to get me to do it. It was terrible. I'm not scared of spiders or snakes or anything else. It's weird.

"Every night I clean up the house and do everything housewives do. I also like to read a lot, maybe a book or two a week. Whenever I am sick or have to stay home I really miss school. I sit there and think 'Well, about now I'd be in fifth hour doing such and such.' I get bored, and the time goes by so slowly. I really like what I do."

Judy Barnes never stops. Her actions and gestures and the way she talks all reflect her energy. She said she ends her day about 11:00 p.m. when she sort of falls over into bed. Our conversation never really ended as she exclaimed, "Oh, there's a book you should read called Somewhere Off the Coast of Maine. You would love this book; it's about . . . ."

PETS DISPLAY DIVERSE PERSONALITIES

IT'S A ZOO OUT THERE

In a school with a multi-faceted student body, it's not surprising that the diversity of pets is just as great as the diversity of students. In addition to the basic dogs and cats, East students also boast fish, snakes, birds, and many even more unique animals.

Dogs and cats may be common pets, but many of their personalities are anything but common. "A lot of times my mom will get up in the morning and take our dog, Cassie, to play with her boyfriend, Film-Flam," said senior Lori Brazil. Senior Jenny Cowden gets a laugh when her three-legged cat, Tripod, scratches wildly into the air, thinking he's scratching his neck.

Other animals aren't quite as harmless. Senior Lara Langstaff's dog, Bandit, has a long history of terrorizing her friends. "Andrea Reeves, Val Rockwell, Brogan Sullivan — they've all fallen prey to Bandit," Langstaff admitted. "I think that dog is possessed," commented Sullivan.

Senior Susan Walden worried about her dog, Buddy, a tan Lhaso Apso. "A few years ago he bit my mother so badly she had to get stitches," said Walden. But not all of the pets were born this way. "My dog, Molly, ate two boxes of rat poison. I think that's what caused her brain damage," guessed Senior Laura McConnell.

Not only are the personalities of the animals bizarre, but the personalities of the pet owners are also often unique as well. "When I was little I used to dress my dogs up in fur doll coats with crystal buttons and sequined crowns, and I would paint their toenails," recalled senior Alissa Taylor. Dressing up animals was not uncommon. Senior Allyson Kerby jokingly remembered, "I always put diapers on my dog, Sadie." In an effort to raise holiday spirit, McConnell's dog, Molly, was given a red and green collar with flashing Christmas lights around it. "I think she really liked it," said McConnell.

Some students enjoyed giving creative names to their pets. Senior David Feiock decided that "Slick" would be an appropriate name for his fish, while Senior Michael Rapp offered, "My fish don't have names, they have numbers," Junior Darren Kennedy's fish began to amaze him after he named them. "My fish are all named after people in my life, and the funny thing is that they start to take on the characteristics of these people," said Kennedy.

Many of the pets that comprise East's menagerie are unique in themselves. Senior Chris Adams, for example, was very proud of his one-eyed bull snake, Richard. Adams was quick to point out that senior Mark Heineken also keeps a similar snake. In addition, Heineken treasures his parakeet, Pee-Wee. "He belonged to my great grandmother, but she died," said Heineken. "The bird got passesd around to every member of the family, and we got stuck with it."

THRIFTSHOPS:

HALLOWED HALLS OF PRECIOUS JUNK

FACT: The majority of Shawnee Mission East students are well off.

FACT: There are many people in the area that need help.

More and more East students are getting tired of trying to keep up with ever changing fashion trends and footing the bill for maintaining a high-fashion wardrobe. A fun and charitable way to get rid of the fashionplate blues is to go thriftshopping. Not more than ten minutes from East a student might encounter anywhere from five to ten secondhand stores. These stores give all their profits to organizations for the blind, retarded, or other social services, as well as providing quality clothes for the poor at affordable prices.

However, no one is naive enough to think that charity is the only reason for students' interest in these chambers of precious junk. Students can find clothes that went out of style so long ago that they can't possibly go out of style again. Junior Lance Winn expressed his own shopping as "the only way of getting clothes that people are too dumbfounded to comment on."

Adventurers may choose to just enjoy a day of trying on new and different styles; however, purchases are far more exciting. For a novice conservative thriftshopper, jeans are a popular item. Conversely, a seasoned bargain hunter goes straight for the more exotic dress jackets, Romanesque robes, or plaid pants. Some of the all-time great purchases include Winn's magenta paisley pajamas, junior Doug Kandt's four-inch-soled dress shoes from a lost but not forgotten era, or junior Kirsten Binda's oversized geometrically decorated men's underwear.

Personally I love plaid, and I just can't find it anywhere else but Ralph Lauren and The Second Fiddle. Don't let me disillusion you, it's not always one big blue light special. There are a lot of bell bottoms, wide collars, and soiled boxers to steer clear of. But thriftshops do offer anything from clothes to home appliances. Kandt comments, "Only at thrift shops will you find such a wide selections of 8-track tapes to meet even the most finicky music lovers' needs at such rock bottom prices."

No matter what your interests, thrift shops have it all for any personality. Kandt sums it up well, "Thrift shopping is like billiards; you just hit them as hard as you can and hope you pocket a winner!"

MAN BITES DOG

"Poetry is a plot by English teachers, it really doesn't mean anything," said coach and American history teacher Karl Englund in that inciting tone of voice that he uses so well. English teacher and yearbook sponsor Donna Skates said: "Englund brings to mind that mistyped journalistic cliche 'Man bites dog.' If a dog walked up to Englund and said something he disagreed with, Englund would bite him (especially if the dog were a liberal), and then lean back with a smile on his face and wait for someone to get upset."

As the new group of American and U.S. History students walked into class for the first time, they carried with them rumors of impossible tests, nightly college-level reading assignments, and unattainable A's. Fear and apprehension were in their hearts.

But what they were not prepared for was the abrupt, contrary opinions which Englund expresses on controversial topics and which punctuate his classes. These statements of opinion rapidly became the heart of any discussion in one of his classes, inciting reactions ranging from enthusiastic approval to sheer outrage.

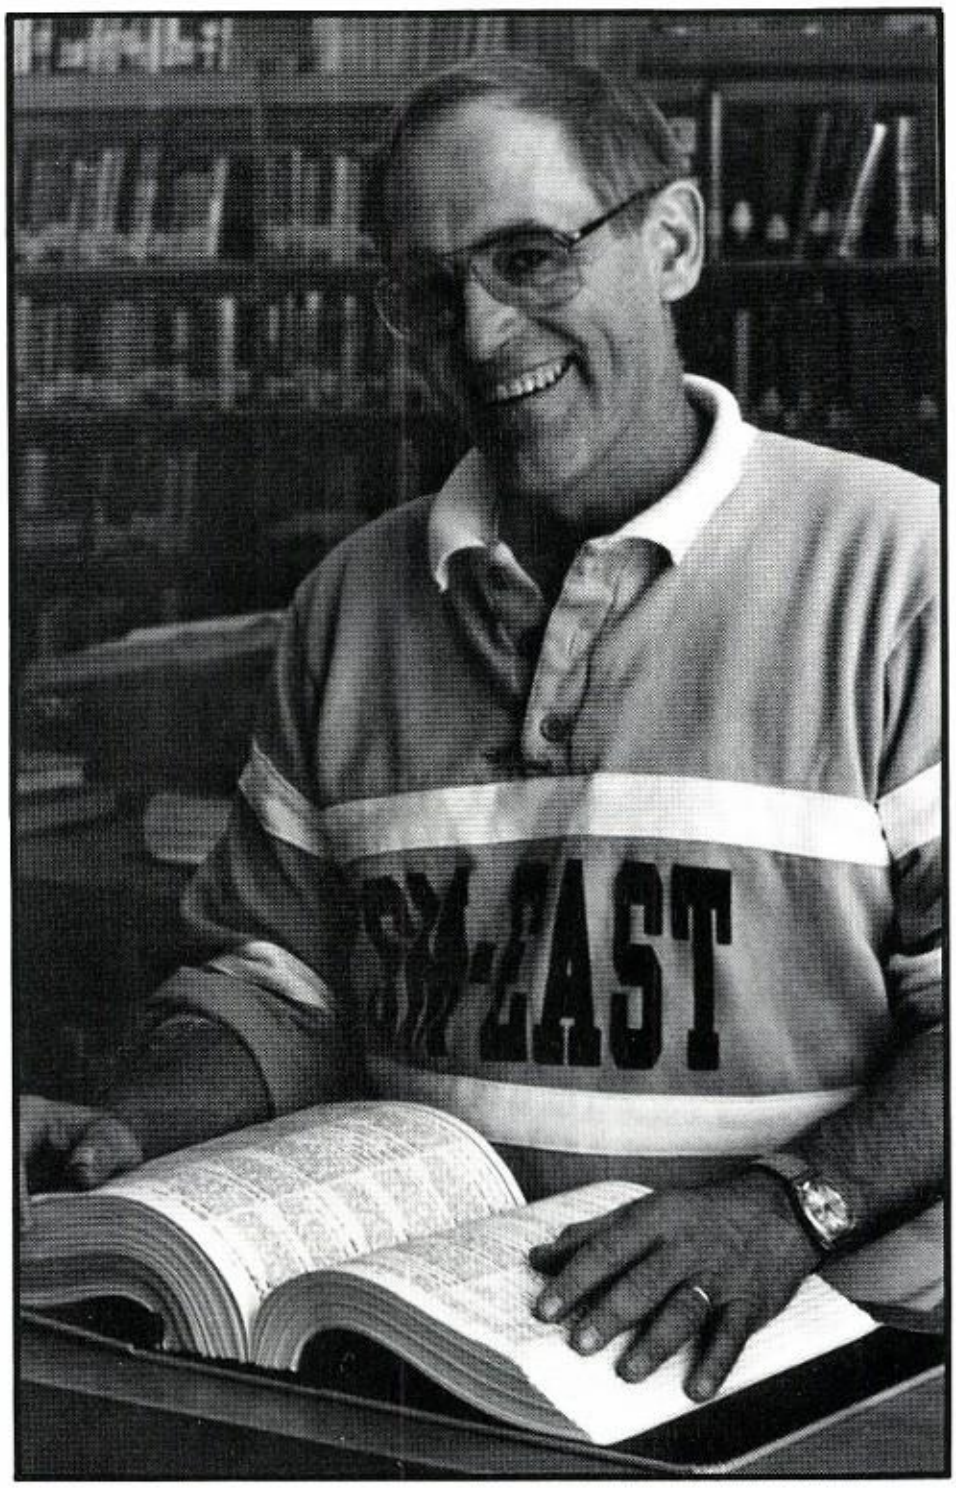
But this controversial teaching style is at the heart of Englund's educational philosophy. "A lot of teaching people, is getting their attention. Once they're listening to you, they might actually learn something," said Englund.

Senior Sebastian Kuelps, reflecting on the U.S. history course he took last year, confirmed this truism. "Englund taught a college-level lecture course and still made it interesting," said Kuelps. Whether or not students and faculty agreed with Englund's statements, they agreed that his teaching style goes beyond merely shocking students to motivating quality learning. Kuelps explained: "He built respect for students and students respected him. This gave me incentive to work in his class. He was better able to connect students with the issues than most teachers I've had."

Englund taught drivers' education before transferring to the social studies department where he now teaches. "I became a teacher primarily to be a coach," said Englund, who is now the Boys' Cross Country and Track coach at East. "But I rapidly discovered that I enjoyed teaching just as much."

He was asked to move into the social sciences position that he now holds because of his extensive knowledge of history obtained through reading. Englund is knowledgeable about literally thousands of books — history, historical fiction, and biography. This mastery of the subject becomes readily obvious in any lecture he gives.

And what of the seriousness of many of his assertions? "A lot of it is gadfly," says Englund amiably of his teaching style.



Karl Englund researches some of his favorite poets. (photo by Darren Kennedy)

American Heritage dictionary defines "gadfly" as one that acts as a contuctively provocative stimulus. There could not be a more accurate description of the truth.

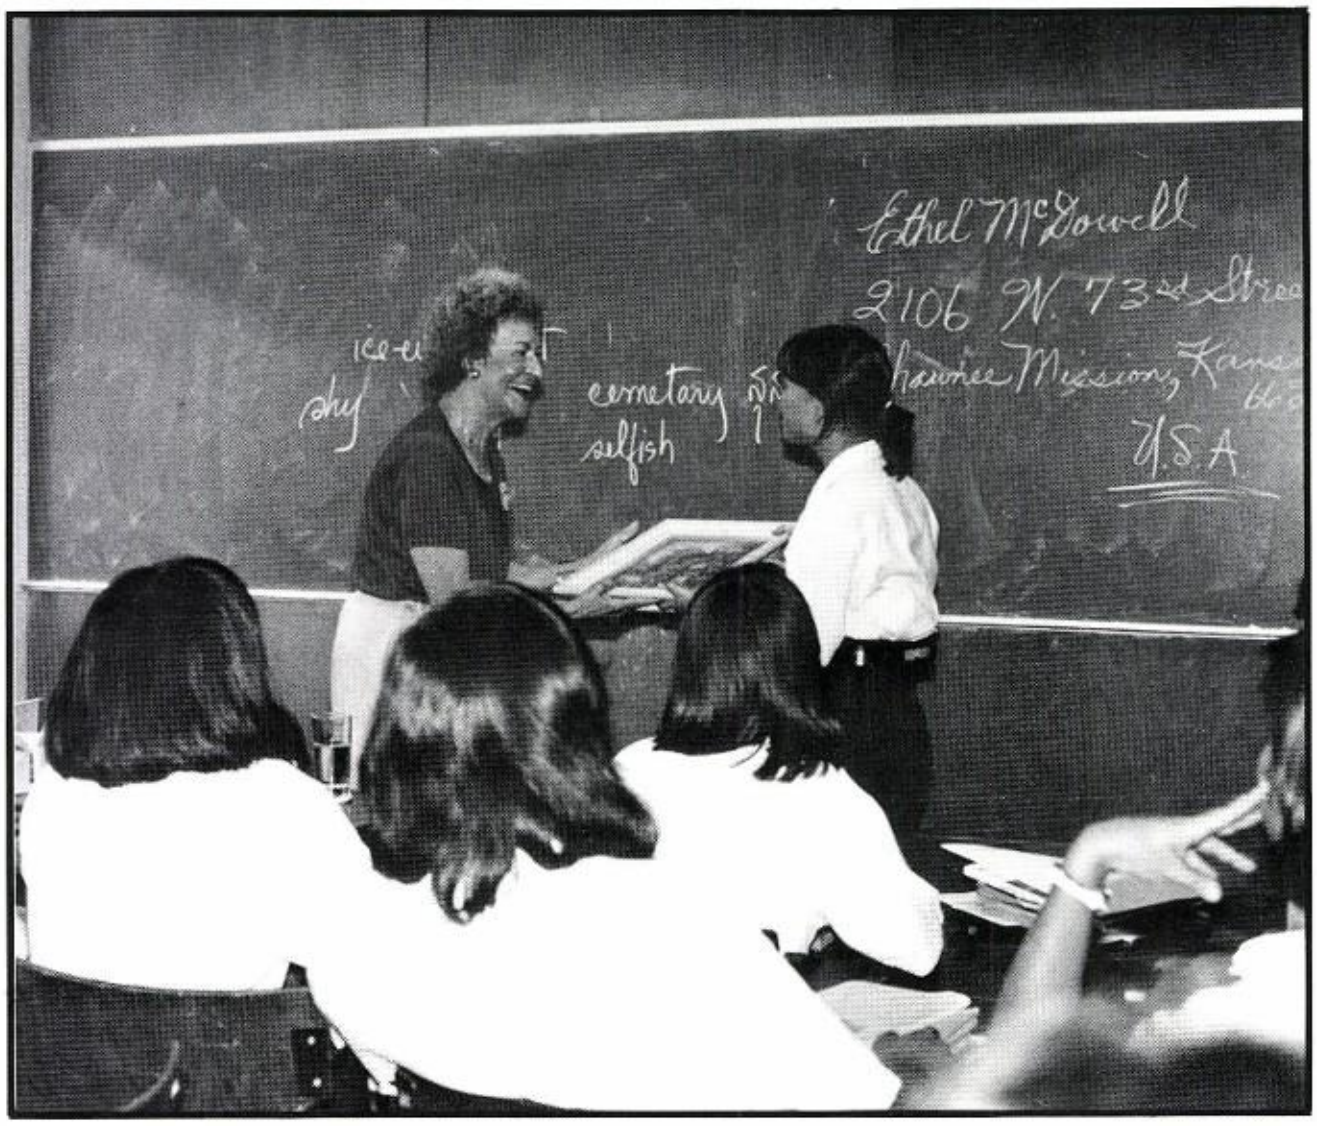
TEACHER IN THAILAND



While visiting Thailand, Ethel McDowell taught English pronunciation.

When opportunity knocked for Nom Singnoi, it was Ethel McDowell who pulled open the door for him. McDowell is a teacher at East, and Nom Singnoi is from Thailand.

About fifteen years ago, Singnoi came from Thailand to America with his cousin. Singnoi's weatlhy aunt in Bangkok wished her own son to be educated in the United States and offered to pay Nom's expenses if he would travel with his cousin and work for him, once in the States. Both Singnoi and his parents realized what an opportunity to study in America would mean. Singnoi attended Indian Hills Junior High while cleaning house and cooking meals for his cousin.

McDowell acquainted herself with Singnoi at a birthday dinner given in her honor by two other Thai friends. The two invited Singnoi to celebrate with them because his birthday fell on the same day McDowell's did. Singnoi was shy as he didn't know many Americans yet. McDowell, however, graciously welcomed Singnoi, and the two kept in touch.

McDowell recognized Singnoi's potential. She said, "I could see that he was quite intelligent." However, Singnoi's family in Thailand lacked funds for education above the high school level. The process of signing certain papers from the American Embassy was relatively simple as was McDowell's decision. She said, "When you see what someone is capable of doing if given the chance, if you have a heart in your chest, you will give the person that chance." McDowell arranged with Singnoi and his parents to adopt him in order to send him to college in America. McDowell explained, "Nom still has a family in Thailand. But the fees charged for foreign students are extremely high. Any college education is extremely expensive."

Singnoi lived with McDowell who tutored him in English. McDowell said, "He knew very little English. He did understand math, though." Singnoi graduated from SM East in 1978 and went on to study at K.U. He earned his master's degree there and is now a senior aeronautical engineer for TWA. And, McDowell said, "He is earning about two times as much money as I am."

Because of these strong connections to Thailand, McDowell visited there with Nom for the first time over the summer. McDowell said, "I planned the trip so I could meet Nom's family. I thought I would go for two weeks but ended up loving it and staying for eight." Accommodating Americans in Thailand is a very prestigious job. A college there offered McDowell a teaching position in the English department. McDowell said, "I was to teach English pronunciation, and since none of the students knew English and I didn't know Thai, I taught through my actions and had no problems with this."

Unaccustomed to the heat, however, McDowell taught only three hours a day. McDowell said, "It was extremely hot, humid, and not air-conditioned. In Thailand they are used to the heat. The students were bewildered that someone could perspire as much as I did."

McDowell described her trip: "The most fun I've ever had." She found the people in Thailand to be shy and smiling. McDowell said, "I had no idea what I was in for. It surpassed Hawaii, and I didn't think anything could surpass Hawaii."

McDowell did not return to the states empty-handed. She brought with her Nom Singnoi's sister, Fon, to live and learn in America. Smiling, McDowell concluded, "I enjoy talking of my experience because it makes me relive so many happy memories."

SENSORY OVERLOAD

Imagine floating high above the Serengeti Plain in a hot air balloon as herds of elephants, zebras, and giraffes graze below. Then picture a gentle landing followed by the epicurean delight of a champagne breakfast. Carolyn Dunseth, an English teacher at S.M. East, didn't have to imagine. She lived it. "I can only describe the experience as a sensory overload" Dunseth said.

Dunseth, accompanied by her sister and cousin, spent July of 1987 traveling in the exotic East African nations of Kenya and Tanzania. The trio commenced their vacation by flying into Nairobi, the capital of Kenya, where they spent three days orienting themselves to the culture. Then, they took a train called the "Lunatic Express" to a town on the Indian Ocean. Dunseth explained the appropriateness of the train's name: "It was crazy — they were playing Christmas music in the station in the middle of July, and my cousin almost got arrested for taking a picture of the building." After this exciting ride, they spent 5 days scuba diving off the coast. The return to Nairobi was by plane; they decided to pass up another trip on the Lunatic Express.

The threesome spent the next three weeks on safari in several game parks, where they were able to observe the famous African wildlife. "I was exceptionally lucky in that I saw two rhino in one day, since there may only be 400 of this type of rhino left in all of Kenya," Dunseth explained. The safari was not all fun and games, however. They were forced to put back-breaking work into extricating their land rover from deep mud on one occasion. Dunseth said they were often kept awake at night by the screeching of the nocturnal animals: "It was as though there were hundreds of animals all trying to top each other in a 'We've got spirit, yes we do . . .' competition." The finale of the safari was the balloon ride and champagne breakfast over the Serengeti Plain.

The next activity that Dunseth and her companions planned was a hike up Kilimanjaro, the tallest mountain in Africa. They spent three and half days climbing from an elevation of 6,000 feet to 17,000 feet, at which point Dunseth was forced to turn back because of leg cramps and possible frost bite. Dunseth's sister and cousin climbed to 18,630 feet, and her cousin, who happens to be a nurse, saved the life of a climber who was suffering from altitude sickness. Back at the hut at 15,000 feet, Dunseth was cared for by a group of French and Germans who sang a rousing rendition of "We Are the World."

Dunseth enjoyed the East African culture, especially the "boozy colonialists," as she described the whites who had come from Europe or were descendants of European colonialists. She said, "These people were too eccentric for England — more natural, less concerned with materialistic things. They were very special." She says she can't wait to go back and wants to spend at least a year there. She summed up her experience by saying, "If I took all the best days of my life and multiplied them by a factor of ten, it would only come close to what my month in Africa was like."

LONE RIDER

The sleek Harley-Davidson engine drones to silence as the intimidating black motorcycle is carefully turned off. The rider, a tall red-bearded man sporting a dark leather jacket and a black t-shirt that proudly declares "Harley-Davidson," slowly dismounts the machine. He adjusts his thick leather belt and casually walks from his parking spot towards the school building. He passes the cheerleaders who are practicing under the supervision of Carolyn Howard, and enters the school. Mrs. Howard, startled by the presence of this strange man, darts to the police station at the top of the hill with the complaint, "There's a Hell's Angel loose in the building!" An alarmed police officer tracks the biker down and questions him thoroughly, only to discover the strange man is none other than Dean Wilhite, SM East's A.V. man on his first day of work.

His job was complex and intense, but his personality made it more interesting and exciting. "I was in charge of just about everything electronic," explained Wilhite. "Computers, VCRs, videotaping — everything. The only thing I didn't do was telephones." He was hired from a group of 95 other possibilities during the summer of '85 when it became apparent that the A.V. job was too complex for anyone who couldn't work on it full time. Wilhite agreed, "It's been pretty involved. Unless you're trained for it, it can't be handled."

In addition, he is a certified instructor for motorcycle education. "I'm not certified to teach history or Shakespeare, but I sure can teach motorcycles." One of the more unique aspects of the job was that Wilhite constantly interacted with other teachers. He confessed that when you are a new teacher at East, "You have to prove yourself. It's like an initiation. I got through that O.K., but I had to learn a lot of things real quick."

One of the reasons Wilhite excelled was his easy-going personality. Another teacher might have taken offense at the fact that a colleague brought the police after him, but Wilhite took it in stride. "If I let that kind of thing bother me, I'd be paranoid," he admitted. "I don't get offended by it." Instead he felt very close to his fellow teachers. "They treated me like an equal. They didn't run around with their noses up in the air and all that. I was worried about that." On the contrary, he became an integral part of the school.

Two years later, the same mysterious biker, after a hard day's work, pulls out of his school parking space and directs his motorcycle to Mission road. He barely proceeds 100 feet when the flashing red lights and sirens inform him that he is being pulled over. A small police officer confidently steps out of the cop car and approaches the biker with a scowl on his face. "What were you doing hanging around that school?" demands the officer.

HOUSE OF ILL REPUTE

A pool of blood seeped into the hardwood floor, staining it permanently. Wrapped in a anket underneath an old bed, Mrs. Sailor's body was discovered four days later in the sement. Although the police had several suspects, the murderer was never brought to ial.

In March of 1979, Bill Boley and his wife moved into a house. While cleaning one of e upstairs bedrooms, they noticed blood stains. A few weeks later neighbors informed e Boleys of the previous owner's murder in 1975. Rumors circulate that Mrs. Sailor was eccentric elderly woman, hiding money and jewels throughout her large, brick home. ne man recalls when she walked into a little room, opened a drawer jammed with oney, and pulled out some loose bills to pay the paperboy. While working in the sement one summer, Boley discovered a glass gallon jar of flour. He explained, "I took e rusty lid off, sure I was going to find diamonds or something. I sifted through all this our out on the front porch and felt like a fool because I found nothing. I was sure I was ing to get rich."

A year later during the Hyde Park Festival, Boley worked as a ticket taker. An older an and his sister, viewing the parade of homes, visited the house where they lived as ildren. Somehow they learned Boley lived next door. The man asked if Boley knew meone had been murdered in his house. "I thought he was talking about Mrs. Sailor," oley remarked, "but he hadn't heard about that." The man was referring to a murder hich occurred in the late twenties or early thirties. "He said, as closely as he could member, a young man renting a room was beaten to death with a dumbbell."

After additional research on the house, the Boleys traced the history of the three evious owners. The house was built in 1908 for 8,000 dollars. The original owner, Mr. ayes, had just retired as Chief of Police in Kansas City. He and his son owned the ayes Detective Agency. However, Hayes died after living in the house for only a few ars. It was then sold to a banker. Mrs. Sailor became the third owner, and lived in the ouse the longest. The predominant theory concerning Mrs. Sailor's stabbing involves a lative, perhaps a nephew, motivated by a large inheritance. However, after her death, e house was taken over in probate. Possibly due to Mrs. Sailor's care, leaded glass, andeliers, and glass doorknobs remain intact today.

Despite the house's eerie history, Boley is not disturbed. He said, "Some people say ese old houses have things that go bump in the night." Boley further revealed, "We ve a neighbor who claims to have a ghost of a Confederate soldier."

MAKING THE MOST OF TIME

Remember what it is like to ace a math test? A feeling of exuberance prevails throughout the rest of the day. Nothing in the world can go wrong.

However, don't break your arm patting yourself on the back. Taro Goto, freshman, has been acting his way through math classes for the past seven years, going all the way to calculus this year, the highest level of math offered at East.

Goto began testing out of math courses in the third grade and has never looked back. By the end of elementary school he had completed Algebra I. He used seventh grade to take geometry and at the same time did an independent study project in Algebra II.

By the eighth grade at Mission Valley Junior High School, Goto was coming to East every morning to take trigonometry, an honors course for juniors at East.

Finishing the East math curriculum this year, Goto was asked to explain his prodigy. "It just happens to be easy for me," he said. "It didn't start getting hard until trig."

Although the situation could have created tension between Goto and his classmates, he never seemed to encounter any such difficulties. "I've been doing this since the third grade, so people understand. I've been taking classes with the seniors for several years, so they've gotten used to me."

In addition to his mathematical prowess, Goto possesses athletic and musical ability. He won first place in the State Keyboard competition in the 7-9 division last year, and he plans to seek a spot on the tennis team. Asked how he manages to juggle these activities, Goto responded, "I try to make the most of my time."

And what about high school math? Goto plans to pursue higher level math as an independent study project and continue in his role of the math ace that everyone loves to hate.

DISTINCTIVE DRAWING

Mike Panos is blessed with considerable artistic skill. His art foundations teacher, Juliet Miller, said the fifteen-year-old freshman is one of the most talented artists in his grade. He seems to have a bright future in architecture, design, or some other career involving technical drawing. Panos also has strong feelings about his reasons for drawing and the purpose of drawing.

Sketching and drawing are Panos's preferred forms of art. He has been drawing for as long as he can remember, but he didn't realize he was exceptional until the sixth grade. "My family and friends started telling me, 'Hey, that's really good. You've got some real talent,'" Panos explained. Panos does not come from an artistic family: he seems to have picked it up on his own. In Panos's words, "It started with doodling in class. Then I found myself rushing to get my work done so I could get to my drawing." He now spends at least an hour a day sketching and drawing.

Panos draws for personal reasons. When asked if he had entered any of his works in art contests, Panos replied, "No, I draw for my own satisfaction. I really only show my work to my family, class, and friends." Panos enjoys simply trying to duplicate an object or photograph as realistically as possible. The subjects of his drawings may be fantastic or mythical, but they are always drawn realistically rather than abstractly. He says his favorite artist is Salvador Dali: "A lot of my works are similar to his in the impression they try to give." Other influences on his art are skating and punk bands like the Misfits.

Panos often draws pictures that might startle some people. His explanation: "People should draw for themselves, not to please others. You shouldn't worry about what others might think of your work."

A STEP BEYOND

At a school renowned for academic achievement, even an extremely gifted student may have difficulty gaining recognition. Freshman Ramesh Ponnuru, however, is so powerful scholastically that he stands out even among the best East has to offer. Yet in spite of his success, Ramesh continues to keep his feet on the ground.

One of his more distinguishing accomplishments is his rapid advancement through the school system. After completing seventh grade at Mission Valley, Ramesh skipped eighth grade and enrolled as a freshman. "It'd be nicer if I had some friends from 8th grade here," Ramesh admitted. But there were no classes left to offer a student who virtually inhaled all he was taught. And even more surprising is how quickly Ramesh has advanced in mathematics. This year he conquered honors trigonometry, a class normally populated with juniors and seniors, but to Ramesh, simply "a little harder work."

Aside from his unusual activities at East, Ramesh also enters many state competitions. Claiming 6th place in the statewide Mathcounts contest was "a big disappointment" to Ramesh, who aspired to be in the top four and therefore advance to the national level. In addition, through a special Duke University program Ramesh endured the S.A.T. as a seventh grader and emerged with Kansas' highest score from his age group. Far from arrogant about his performance in the various contests, Ramesh instead displays his down-to-earth sense of humor. "Some of the competitions are fun," he has discovered, "especially when they have free food."

All this success would have an effect on most people, but Ramesh takes it in stride. "I really don't think of myself as that intelligent," he explained. "It's just really normal to me." And even though most students would be upset and disoriented after leaving all their friends behind, Ramesh's adjustment has gone very smoothly. "I haven't faced any major problems here, and overall I am very glad that I made the decision to bypass 8th grade," he concluded.

After two or three more years at East (Ramesh is considering skipping another grade), he has set his sights on Harvard, where he hopes to become involved in politics.

THE THRILL OF COMPETITION

Some run to improve the heart, some to stay thin. Not Carmen Richert. She runs to compete. Richert, a freshman, has enjoyed running during the last two summers with Johnson County Parks and Recreation Track and Field, a program enabling students to train and compete over the summer. When asked whether she would like to continue with this summer program, Richert replied emphatically, "I'm going to do it for a long time. It was especially fun if you like to run with other people and to get to know other people."

However, along with the excitement and thrill of competition come the early morning practices, finding that extra drive, and going to bed a little earlier to stay healthy. At practice, Richert focused on the 800 meter run and both the 800 meter and 400 meter relays. Placing second at the JCPR Regional meet this summer, she moved on to compete at the State track meet in Topeka. "Last year I finished second in the 800, and this year I finished fifth," Richert recollected. With a giggle, she explained that "the runners were better this year." The first place runners at State were eligible to run at Hershey, Pennsylvania, at the National meet. Richert's best time of the season for the 800 meter race was 2.45. Had she been running at State, this time would have beaten the first place time of 2:46.

Encouraged by her summer experience, Richert decided to try cross-country at East. "I was surprised to make varsity. I've never run long distance before," said Richert. "I thought it would be hard, but it's becoming a lot easier and more fun than I expected. I used to favor running short distance, but I guess I'm more of an endurance runner — that's why I went out for cross-country — to get in shape for basketball too."

Already Richert is an important part of the cross-country team. She has competed at the varsity level since the start of the season in the 5k and 2 mile races.

Jeff Goodman studies about one of the many countries he has visited — France, England, Holland, Japan, Thailand, and China. (photo by Missy Adel)

LANCER ABROAD

When most freshmen learn about world geography, all they can do is imagine the appearance of the faraway, exotic countries they study about. Some may even dream about going to those places. Jeff Goodman is a student who doesn't have to fantasize; he can recall memories of his first-hand experiences. Goodman's traveling exploits include a school-sponsored European trip to Paris, Amsterdam, Edinburgh, and London, and an Asian trip with his parents to Tokyo, Bangkok, Hong Kong, Beijing, and Shanghi.

Some of his biggest surprises came at meal time. "The Chinese food in China is nothing like you get here," Goodman explained. "It's really disgusting." Goodman also discovered that a McDonald's or Pizza Hut could be found everywhere.

Goodman found that people in France are very rude and indifferent toward foreign visitors. On the other hand, London citizens were extremely polite and courteous to him. His visit to the Communist country of China proved to be one of the most interesting and educational parts of his trip. "It wasn't as strict as you hear about Russia, but the people looked sad. You could tell that they rarely were exposed to Americans because they stared at you a lot." Whereas most people would find being stared at a unsettling experience. Goodman was not fazed.

Goodman's future travel plans include Australia, and maybe someday, the USSR. Although Goodman has no interest in travel as a career, he does wish to become a successful actor. "If I make enough money, I hope to go everywhere in the world."

A-O-KAYE

"Whan that Septembre with his shourës sootë / the drought of August hath percëd to the rootë . . ." (Chaucer, sort of). Both the Medieval period and the Renaissance returned to K.C. for the annual Renaissance festival. But this time, amidst the lords and ladies of yesteryear, sophomore Michelle Kaye was there.

An actress in a troupe known as the Canterbury Whimsicals, Kaye performed two to three shows a day at the festival. In addition to performing, Kaye maintained a 16th century persona from 10:30 AM when the gates opened until 6:30 PM when they closed. Rehearsal included choosing a 16th century character, writing a story about her, and acting out the story, thus making the script more believable. Kaye said, "The hardest part of the preparation for the festival was learning the English accent and remembering that I was not Michelle, but Diana."

During her summer vacation in Colorado, Kaye attended another Renaissance Festival. She said, "It was interesting to see the same festival in Colorado. I met some of the 'roadies' — those who travel from town to town with the festival — and I ended up working with them in K.C."

Any role interests Kaye. She played Hermia last year in East's production of A Midsummer's Night Dream and portrayed a maid in Harvey this year. Kaye hopes to continue acting in the Renaissance Festival indefinitely and plans to make acting her career.

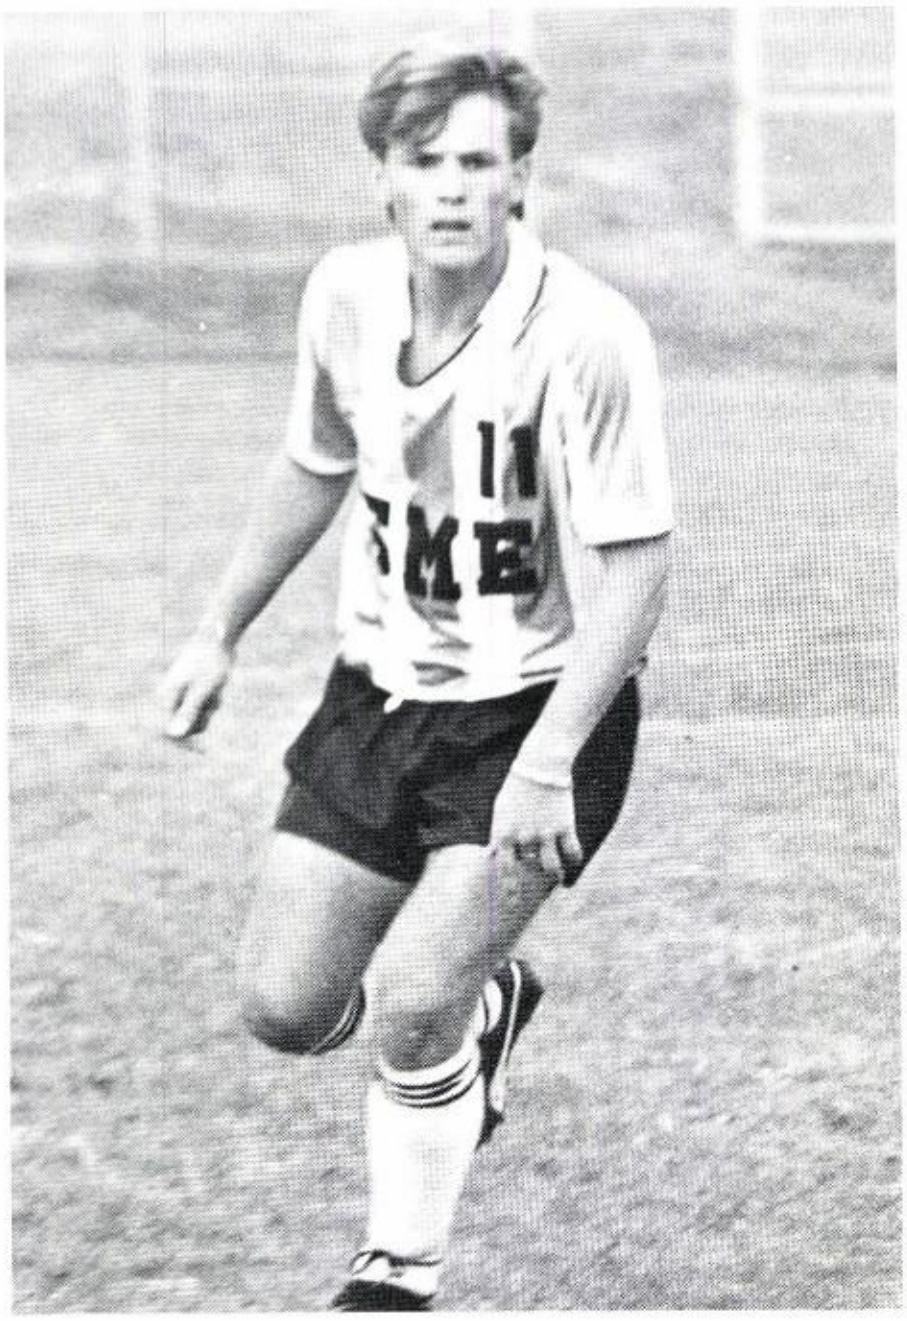
SOCCER SUCCESS



Tony Berg is an exceptional soccer player. Although only sixteen and a sophomore, he has already accumulated an impressive number of awards and achievements. His success has come through hard work, family motivation, natural ability, and the setting and pursuit of goals.

Throughout his career, Berg has strived to be the best. He was selected for the Kansas state soccer team for his age group three times — in 1985, 1986, and 1987. In addition, he was chosen for the under-thirteen-and-one-half regional team in 1985. This regional team, which played in Canada, consisted of the best players from a twelve-state area. Also, in 1986 Berg became the first freshman to play and start for the S.M. East varsity soccer team. He started again as a sophomore in 1987.

Berg's family has a strong background in soccer. His father played at the University of Connecticut, and his older brother Jamie is now playing varsity soccer as a freshman at Depauw. Berg said of his brother, "I saw how well he was doing, and I decided to try to follow his example." Berg's father has encouraged him to be the best he can be and would like to see Berg get a soccer scholarship.

Berg has truly dedicated himself to soccer. Because he hasn't participated in any other sport competitively, he has been able to concentrate on soccer year round. Berg said he has always had some natural skill, but that after elementary school he "had to depend on hard work" to keep himself above the others.

Berg has set several goals for the future. He would like to make the regional team again; he hopes to be selected first team Sun Country as a junior; and he has a strong desire to play college soccer.

Berg said he loves soccer for several reasons: "It's an excellent game — fast paced, exciting, constant action, no pads. It's the ultimate sport."

LIFE'S A PITCH

"My name is Tara Kirby
but people call me Kirb, and when I get mad
please do not disturb!"

This rap echoed over Estes Park, Colorado, as the summer softball team, the KC Stars, wound down their five day tournament. The sixteen sophomores from East had just played in a slow-pitch softball tournament in Estes Park. While their team was composed of fifteen-year-olds, other teams had players ranging in age from twenty to thirty-five. In addition to the age difference, the type of softball they played was not the same.

"We didn't realize it was a slow-pitch tournament. Since we are a fast-pitch team, my mother was the only one who could pitch the right speed for us!" recalls Shannan Pfeiffer. Slow-pitching involves throwing the ball into a high arc, which then crossed the body, whereas fast-pitching is straight and low, and much harder to hit. After mastering the timing needed to produce a solid hit, the team finished the tournament with a two and one record.

Despite their finish, the team enjoyed a number of other activities. In the city of Estes Park, Amy Baker and Holly Shelby sang "Standing on the Corner Watching the Guys Go By" for the whole town to hear. They made quite a hit with the residents and other tourists.

"Kindren is my name
softball is my game.
I want to be like Brett
and get a lot of fame."

The week "rapped up" with rhymes about the coaches, other players, and all the good times they had.

MUSIC PAINTS THE PICTURE

Although he is only a sophomore, Noel Selders has already made his mark in music and gained the support of his classmates. Two years ago he and the other members of the group LSB took second place at the Battle of the Bands. Last year, as bass guitar player for Just Us, he won the contest. He said, "We were just a trio that didn't really have our act together. We wrote our own stuff and didn't know what to expect." The band was surprised and excited about winning. However, they were disappointed that very few people outside the high school community were exposed to their talent.

Selders has been writing his own music since his preschool years. He began to compose what he remembers as being "mostly stupid little stuff" on an organ. For his fifth Christmas, his parents gave him a Mickey Mouse drum set. He learned the basic techniques of drumming on this set and later took over his brother's student line drums. In his early grade school years, he also taught himself to play lead and bass guitar. "Until about third grade I thought everyone could do that," he recalls.

When asked what he wants people to get from his music, Selders explained, "Just close your eyes and let the music give you the picture .... It paints it for you."

ARTISTIC AVOCATION

The average Shawnee Mission East student finds it difficult to juggle the responsibilities of attending school, completing homework, and saving a little spare time for herself. However, for the past four years, sophomore Mika Reinsch has managed to find the time to be one of eighteen members in the exclusive American Youth Ballet. The class meets for approximately ten hours a week and continues year-round. Furthermore, when the company is preparing for one of two annual performances, additional Saturday and Sunday rehearsals are required. "I don't really mind the rehearsals," commented Reinsch, who began dancing at the age of five, "but sometimes it means I can't go out with my friends on the weekends." For the 1987 Christmas performance, the ballet troupe presented Through the Looking Glass, the story of Alice in Wonderland. Reinsch played a tiger lily and was scheduled to perform a short solo, her second for the company.

In addition to the local American Youth Ballet, Reinsch had the honor of being selected to travel to New York City for the last two summers as a member of the School of American Ballet. To be considered for the company, Reinsch competed against dancers from across the nation as well as from foreign countries for one of two hundred positions. The experience definitely made a positive impact on Reinsch as she would like to continue her involvement with ballet for the rest of her life. When asked about future prospects, Reinsch replied, "I'm not sure if I will go to college before pursuing a dancing career, but I plan to do this as a living."

FRENCH IS FUN

Going to summer school is not an experience that students usually look forward to. In fact, it is basically considered a punishment for bad grades during the school year. A few people, however, actually enjoy summer classes and even go out of their way to enroll in them. Yana Minnis is one of these people.

Minnis, a sophomore, enjoyed her French I and II classes so much that she decided to continue her studies more intensely during the summer months. A friend had told her about a French summer program in Brainerd, Minnesota, and she thought it would be worth forfeiting one month of her summer vacation.

"The camp was pretty much what I thought it would be, although it was a little more rustic than I expected," Minnis said with a smile. "We lived in log cabins and bathed in the lake every morning."

The rest of the day consisted of one hour each of activity, speaking in groups, reading, and study hall; two hours of grammar; an evening program; and, of course, lunch and dinner. The campers had about two and a half hours of free time a day and even went on a field trip "to a laundromat to do laundry."

Minnis plans to take French V her junior year and hopes to continue taking French courses at a local college as senior. Why so much French? "I'd like to go to Africa for a few years and perhaps be a doctor there. I guess I don't see French as a profession in itself, but as a means to an end."

SOCCER EXPRESS

Nebraska, bruised ribs, phone calls to Mom, goose eggs, teamwork and cooperation . . . Soccer. Definition: a fast-paced sport played by Express — an all girl soccer team from Kansas City.

Beginning her soccer career in kindergarten with her father as her mentor, Kathleen May has played on both coed and all-girl soccer teams for ten years. With this past experience and eagerness to play, she tried out for Express and won spots as both a fullback and goalie, leading to a tour throughout the Midwest with the soccer team during he summer of '87.

The team, consisting of girls fourteen to sixteen years old, and hailing from Lenexa, Olathe, DeSoto, Lee's Summit and Shawnee Mission, first played in Omaha, Nebraska. The Express team lost their first game but rebounded to win the second. "We just needed to win that second game to get a boost to go on." said May. After winning the remaining three matches in Omaha, the team headed west for the Pike's Peak Tournament in Colorado Springs. As the pressure mounted, so did the team's aspirations. However, their enthusiasm was dampened when their final game against J.B. Marine of St. Louis ended in a five to one defeat for the team, completing their play in the tournament.

May continued to play soccer during the school year, participating in two outdoor teams during the fall and spring and one indoor team during the winter and summer. She keeps in shape for her game by attending five two-hour practices a week. She is also an assistant coach for both her younger brother's and sister's teams. "Helping kids to improve their game and their self-esteem is what I enjoy the most," said May. With this vast experience as both a coach and a player, May plans to continue playing soccer throughout high school and will possibly attend Emporia State, a college known for its winning teams.

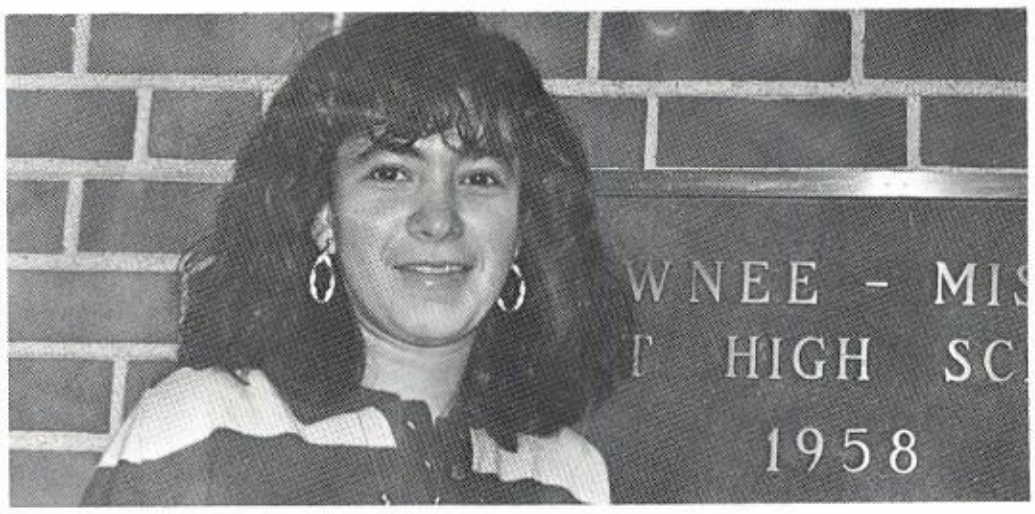
Modern Pilgrims



From the USSR to the USA, Irena Pelman has found a home at East. (photo by Valerie Gilgore)

In 1620, the Pilgrims came to the New World to escape religious persecution. Today, the Soviet Union is ruled by a government which does not allow the practice of any religion, especially the Jewish religion. Irena Pelman and her family, modern Pilgrims, left the Soviet Union for a new life in the United States where they could freely practice their Jewish faith.

Since she was a young child when she lived in Russia, Pelman was almost completely protected from the religious persecution most Russian Jews receive. "I didn't even know what the word Jew meant," she explained. "It is an unpleasant word in Russia. I hated it when my mom told me that we were Jewish. It's like a bad word." In the Soviet Union, the Communist government srongly discourages the practice of any religion, but they are especially strict on Judaism. It is very hard for Jews to get into universities or to be hired for any skilled jobs. Because 1978 was a very lenient year, Pelman's family had little trouble gaining permission to leave the USSR. Had they waited another year to ask for a visa, the Pelmans might never have gotten out.

Most Russians live in apartments, but these are not like the ones Americans are used to. The Pelman family had just one room for itself, while they shared the bathroom, kitchen, and telephone with another family. This room, where all eating, sleeping, and other daily activities took place for Pelman and her parents, contained a refrigerator, two big beds, a table, and other necessary appliances.

Pelman's voyage to freedom began in the midst of a lot of confusion for an eight year old. Not only did she not understand why her family was leaving Russia, but Pelman also had a hard time with the new language. "I was told that we were going to Vienna. In Russian, Vienna means vein. I thought we were going to a vein," she confessed. "I really didn't understand at all."

After leaving their home city of Odessa, the Pelmans went to Moscow and from there to Vienna. The biggest contrast that Pelmans noticed between the Soviet Union and Vienna was the clothing. "There were really nice designer clothes there. In Russia, the government distributed the same style of sweaters to everybody." Pelman was able to buy some of these new clothes when their luggage didn't catch up with them until they got to Italy, over a month later. After three months in Italy and overnight stop in New York, the Pelmans finally ended up in St. Louis, where they lived for two and a half years.

At first, adapting to the U.S. was very tough for Pelman. "The first day of school was horrible," she confessed. "Everyone stared at me. I only knew a couple of words of English. I had no idea what the teacher was saying. When I got home, I told my mom I was never going back." Shortly after that, Pelman transferred to a school where there were other immigrants and she was able to speak Russian. "Once we learned it well enough, my friends and I always spoke English to each other."

Just about every American has a preconceived idea about Russians, and most of the time this is negative. What is surprising to most Americans is that Russians also have many stereotypes of what Americans are like. Pelman observed that "their stereotypes are more screwed up than ours. Most Russians don't know what is going on, since the government doesn't tell the truth about the United States and things that are happening in Russia." She supported this statement by telling about a Soviet TV reporter who did a story on Kansas City. "He talked to our family about how nice Kansas City was, but when the actual show was aired in the Soviet Union, all it showed were cripples, bums, and alcoholics. What kind of opinion can they have if that's all they see?"

Although an American now, Pelman still recognizes her Russian background. "I'm glad I was born there and that I got to experience what it was like, but after living in America, I could never get used to the Soviet Union again."

Good Things To Come

A Jack Kramer racket in the hands of the eleven-year-old Lisa Denton would prove to be the promise of good things to come. Fond memories of the soft, worn leather strap of the handle and strong wooden neck would accompany Denton, a junior, to the highest tournament in the USTA Junior Association — the Nationals held in Charleston, South Carolina.

Denton's trek to the Nationals had begun many months earlier with competitions in numerous tournaments throughout the area. One such competition was the Missouri Valley Tennis Tournament in which players from Kansas, Nebraska, Ohio and other Midwestern states meet to play and compete with other top ranked amateurs in tennis. Also, it is here that players must qualify for the National Tournament. In addition, Denton progressed to the National Clay Court competition traditionally held in Virginia Beach, Virginia. Following this competitive play, she traveled to San Jose, California, where she participated in the National Hard Court Tournament. In San Jose, she had the opportunity to play against the top 120 girls in the United States. Practice and preparation paid off when she entered the final sixty-four, the top division, and won her first two matches against the number three seeded player in the nation. Denton's competitive performance ended after losing the third match to that same player. Her 1987 season ended with a sixth place ranking in the Missouri Valley League.

When she's not practicing tennis or working part-time at Crabtree & Evelyn and Woodside Racket Club, Denton enjoys running, playing the piano, drawing and painting. However, Denton's main interest lies in sports. She credits her interest in sports to her two older brothers and sister. "They've always been really supportive and encouraged me when I was not playing at my best," said Denton. This particular kind of positive support has carried over into other arenas of Denton's life, especially her positive attitude towards competition. She said, "You can't be discouraged by potholes on the way — just learn from your mistakes and keep striving to reach your ultimate goal."

Considered a lifetime sport, tennis has taught Denton a self-dicipline useful in other facets of life. "You don't always win," Denton states, "but you learn how to handle yourself and cope with others."

CIT

The Northeastern United States overflows with an historical feeling of culture blended with skyscrapers and huge cities. Through Camp Thunderbird in Bemidji, Minnesota, Artie Lang and Ben Warner discovered this region in a different way from an average tourist.

The trip to the Northeast taught reliability to the counselors-in-training, a much needed skill for the return to camp. Camp Thunderbird is made up of two separate camps, one for boys and one for girls. Upon reaching the summer before 10th grade, a camper "graduates," becoming a Junior Leader, a stage in-between the camper and counselor. This transition continues to the following summer where the Junior Leader becomes a counselor-in-training. The CIT learns how to help the campers, run activities, and keep in touch with the children's parents. A privilege of becoming a CIT is this vacation to the Northeast. It helps to teach responsibility, while bringing these new counselors closer together.

The Quincy Market in Boston, Massachusetts, was a fine beginning for an unforgettable journey. The next stop was Salem, Massachusetts, where the famous witch trials occurred. Surprisingly, the tour of the "witch house" proved a humorous experience for both Artie and Ben.

"The tour guide was an illiterate twelve year-old. First, she told us it was not a witch house, which we had come to see, and then she began her memorized speech. Intelligent bits of information came from her brain, like, 'this is a bread warmer, used to warm bread.' No kidding! It was hilarious!"

Next they visited the giant L.L. Bean outlet in Freport, Maine. One night of the stay involved a beach and lobster bake. Ben happily reminisced, "It was about 75 degrees; the setting sun reflected off the white boats while the waves came in, one after another. It was just incredible."

This feeling of serenity didn't last, however, because muscle fatigue pained them as they rode bicycles in the mountainous region of Acadia National Park, Maine. The stress continued when they reached Baxter State Park. Mount Kahtadin had to be conquered on foot: 5,200 feet. Climbing in the rain and with no visibility, they finally reached a bunkhouse; unfortunately it had no mattresses. This was their first stay out of a tent and a welcomed change.

A bit weary, they drove to Quebec City, Quebec, where they relaxed with a movie. They chose Predator, but it was inconveniently in French. Following a Blue Jays' baseball game in Toronto, dinner was provided by the restaurant at the top of the Canadian National Tower as the trip began to wind down.

Although their training in the Northeast was in the form of a vacation, being alone with little adult supervision gave them the confidence needed to be counselors. They had tackled the rough wilderness with each other, and the next step would be a cabin full of ten year olds.

Dubbed "King of the Wipeouts," Doug Kandt finds water-skiing somewhat harder than acting tests.

IS THIS GUY FOR REAL?

On the surface, Doug Kandt seems to be the Golden Boy of the Junior Class. He aces tests that everyone else flunks. He carries an above-four-point grade point average and is the Beta Club vice president. He plays tennis and football on the school teams. His great sense of humor and easy going personality have helped him gain the position of Student Council treasurer.

This is the sugar-coated image most students think of when they hear the name Doug Kandt. But is he as perfect as he seems? Well . . . not quite. For each athletic or social grace he seems to possess, he also has several embarrassing moments that add balance to his life.

Kandt loves to waterski, but he's not the best at staying on his feet. His friends have titled him "King of the Wipeouts." He said, "When I wipe out, I wipe out. I hit my head on the ski, do a few flips . . . . Everyone thinks I'm dead."

Along with his waterskiing skills, Kandt's dating skills also leave something to be desired. He said, "Last year I went to Kirsten Binda's to pick her up for a dance. I guess I was pretty nervous, because I left the car in neutral. After I rang the doorbell, I turned around to look at the night sky and saw my car rolling out of the driveway and into the street. I ran back to my car, hoping no one would see me. Of course Mrs. Binda and the family dog were in the front yard watching me. The dog ran toward my car, and when I put the car in drive, I almost ran over it."

Kandt can go on and on about real-life horror stories: coming up short of money on a date in a nice restaurant, acting as a fire hydrant for a dog, and being the victim of many practical jokes, just to name a few. But his best friend Darren Kennedy said, "I've known Doug for a long time, and he has made a couple of less than brilliant moves in those days. But I've never met a more dynamic, open minded, friendly, and humble guy in my life.

SOUTH AFRICAN ADVENTURE

To most, a summer in South Africa would sound more than a little frightening: visions of race riots and wide-spread violence tend to spring to mind. Senior Elana Fremerman, however, said she was "euphoric" when she learned she would be traveling to South Africa on the A.F.S. summer program. "I was thrilled with the idea because I wanted to be thrown into a situation where I would have to fend for myself and where I would be at the mercy of others," Elana remarked. She experienced overwhelming disappointment, however, when she found herself placed in a family (named Posthumus, believe it or not) which was conservative Afrikaner — the white ruling class. Elana said, "My family was totally lacking in culture. I could have had the same experience somewhere in western Kansas."

Elana's experience soon took a turn for the better when she traveled for a week in the Transvaal region, an area populated by many tribal blacks. She was given the opportunity to speak at several black schools there, and she thoroughly enjoyed it: "I spoke about America while forty young, black faces watched me — their huge eyes wide with awe. I told the kids I would've preferred to live like them for the summer, instead of with an Afrikans family." Then, Elana was moved to a more liberal, non-Afrikans family in Capetown, where she was much more comfortable.

Elana began to get out and see for herself what the South African culture was like, now that she was living in a less restrictive family: "I made a real effort to go to the black areas and experience their culture." Elana's cleaning lady taught her a Zulu witch doctor dance; she participated in Graceland-like music sessions; and she had her hair corn-rowed by a group of black women. Her most emotional experience occurred when she joined in a black worker's demonstration at the University of Capetown.

When asked if she met any whites opposed to the system of apartheid, she replied, "Yes, many. I made one friend in Capetown who was strongly anti-apartheid. His classmates considered him a communist." Elana thinks a simple answer to the racial problems does not exist: "I was afraid I wouldn't come back with some kind of answer to give people, and I didn't. The problem is that the Afrikaners will never compromise fully." Before her trip, Elana had intended to be an impartial observer. She explained, "I've learned that I'm too judgemental. I have a lot of guilt because I realize I was biased from the beginning — maybe rightly so, but still, I hoped I would have an unbiased experience."

DOUBLE HITTER

Having excelled in football and baseball, senior Mark Moore was recruited by colleges for his outstanding performance in both sports. Moore stands six feet tall and weighs 190 pounds. He was the starting quarterback and a key player for the Lancer baseball team.

This past summer Mark was invited to play baseball in the U.S Olympic Sports Festival. A highlight experience for him, Moore was placed in the starting line-up to play third base in the gold medal round of the festival. Mark came through in the clutch situation. It was the bottom of the eighth; he hit a bases loaded double off the wall that won the game for the North squad.

In East baseball last season Moore batted a .441 and was the only unanimously voted choice to the All-Sunflower League team. He played pitcher, catcher, first base, third base and designated hitter. "Moore was one of the best players I've ever coached," said Coach Newman.

As for his future athletic plans, Moore will concentrate on one sport: "I love football but I think I will play baseball in college."

- Shana Stephens

Although he has excelled in both football and baseball, Senior Mark Moore plans to concentrate on baseball in college.

Shadowed by native children, Monique Cox instructs villagers in hygiene. As part of the Amigos program Cox lived in the Dominican Republic for a month.

"THERE'S A LIZARD IN MY BED!"

"I guess the funniest thing that happened to me happened on the first morning I was there," Monique Cox began, "when I woke up and there was a lizard hanging from my mosquito netting looking down at me." So goes the story of Cox's trip to the Dominican Republic this past summer.

Cox, a senior, travelled to the Dominican Republic through the Amigos program. The purpose of the stay was obviously not to relax, but to do social work in a poor country. Cox taught villagers basic personal hygiene, and also helped build cement floors in their houses, a skill she learned during the three day briefing she and the other Amigo participants were given before being dropped off in their respective communities.

"The living conditions were a little strange, but it really wasn't that bad. Every night tarantulas would collect on my walls just before I went to bed, but they weren't poisonous, and I just threw my shoes at them. Even though the trip may sound like it was terrible, I learned a lot from it. Just being there and helping these people was worth the inconvenience.

"I would like to do the program again, but I need to work this summer to make some money for college. It was one of the best things I've ever done, and it's too bad I can't do it again."

HORSING AROUND

A hush fell over the crowd as the dust in the arena settled. Senior Tracy Coughlin and her horse Renegade Brave entered the show ring.

For the past ten years, Coughlin and her family have been members of the American Paint Horse Association and have shown Paint horses on the national level. Similar to a Quarter horse, a Paint horse is distinguished by the presence of white coloring on the body other than on the face or legs. Last year, Coughlin and Renegade Brave, also known as Willie, were ranked second in the nation. The ranking is determined by the amount of cumulative points earned by an individual in shows sponsored by the American Paint Horse Association. Horse and rider are judged in ten events which fall into three categories: halter, English, and Western events. Most events are critically judged according to how the horse moves and responds to the rider. Fortunately, according to Coughlin, "Willie is a great athlete and leads the honor role in many of the ten events."

Senior Tracy Coughlin and her horse Willie take a break from training on her family's farm. Last year, Coughlin and Willie were ranked second in the nation by the American Paint Horse Association. (photo by Darren Kennedy)

Needless to say, training a horse for such competition is not an easy job. Coughlin works with Willie almost every day, rain or shine. "Showing horses has taught me a lot about achieving goals, and it has definitely tested my endurance," commented Coughlin. Aside from the time invested in training, Coughlin has had to miss school on several occasions to attend shows. However, the shows are no vacation. Coughlin's average day begin at 4:30 in the morning and ends at 12:30 at night. Despite the hard work, Coughlin is thankful for this opportunity to show horses; "I know I could never repay my family for all they've done, such as paying the entrance fees for the shows."

Unlike most riders at Coughlin's level, she does not plan to take a year off between high school and college. Instead, she intends to devote this summer to working with her younger sister Claire, who hopes to show Willie in later seasons. Even following college, Coughlin said that she will not return to the show ring; "I hope to have a career in the field of law and will probably not have time to train."

PERSPECTIVE

What makes someone unique? Is it a certain activity he excells at? Is it scoring 1600 on the SAT? Is it living in twelve foreign countries? For senior Tim Jurco, his entire perspective on life separates him from a stereotypical high-school student.

"I like to be aware politically, socially, etc," said Jurco. "Morals and honesty are very important to me." He recalled one experience last year that bothered him. One evening after the Vietnam memorial was vandalized, he and senior friend Bill Blake decided to visit and pay their respects. As they were leaving, Vietnam veterans stationed to guard the memorial sent the police after them. Jurco and Blake were pulled over and questioned by police officers and veterans. Jurco, furious that he was being detained for caring, confronted the veterans. "It was a very emotional scene," remembers Jurco. "Bill tells me I gave an incredible speech about values and how they were discriminating against us, but I don't remember any of it because I was so upset." The scene ended with the police leaving and the veterans apologizing to Jurco and Blake.

Karin Denes distributes balloons during last spring's balloon launch. The launch, aimed at promoting hunger conscienceness and raising money, collected $700.

MAKING A DIFFERENCE

Senior Karin Denes hopes to make a difference in ending hunger. First interested as a sophomore, Denes started out with only the support of her social studies teacher, Mr. DeBarthe. Since then, she has organized two canned food drives at East, a balloon launch to earn money, and a hunger briefing to increase public awareness of hunger, a growing problem.

Denes put lots of effort into solving hunger. Her canned food drive, two years ago, produced 350 pounds of food. Last year's drive produced 3,156 pounds, and this year Denes hopes to collect even more. She said, "It's up to us to make the world a better place." Together, Denes and senior Amy Brooks started a hunger club and became hunger briefers, people trained to teach others about the problems of malnutrition in the world. They gave talks on hunger at Argentine Middle School and told the students how to help local hunger organizations, spread the word, participate in food drives, and become hunger briefers themselves. "I feel like I've made a difference. Everyone makes a difference. Every little bit helps," said Denes.

Denes said fighting hunger was not just a high school activitiy. "I care about this too much. I'm going to keep on doing it. It's an ongoing project." Denes has had to deal with one major obstacle: cynicism. "So many people are cynical because they don't think we help Americans." To remedy this situation, Denes wants to take a group of people to see a soup kitchen so they can see the results of their hard work.

THE GIRL WITH THE HAIR

"I don't like to be the norm!" asserted senior Genevieve Kunst, with a toss of her head, making her untameable red hair swing wildly. "When I first came to East, people would tease me about my hair, rating it on what they called the 'poof scale.' At first, it made me want to change. I remember buying some chemical hair straightener. Then I realized what I was doing, that I didn't want to be a product of others' tastes — I rinsed it out!"

Such individualism has characterized Kunst's years at East. A person of diverse interests, her activities include everything from Categories, to co-manager of the varisty soccer team, to orchestra. "I chose to play the viola because it has the harmony instead of the melody — it's different!" Kunst grinned. Kunst's skill with the viola has earned her a place in the Youth Symphony of Kansas City. Also a member of the East orchestra, she has participated in the all-state orchestra; and the ensemble quartet, of which she is a part, has earned the highest ranking at state competitions for the past two years. Asked how she manages to juggle so many activities, Kunst replied, "I want to have a role in things which are important to me. It does drive me crazy, and often it's difficult to find time for myself. When things get too hectic, I head for my aunt and uncle's jacuzzi where I unwind listening to Beethoven and Cat Stevens."

Kunst keeps busy during the summer months as well. The summer before her sophomore year she visited New Zealand, Australia, Singapore, Hong Kong, and Japan. The summer before her senior year, Kunst participated in the People to People program. "We toured by bus for five weeks, visiting Portugal, Spain, Switzerland, Liechtenstein, West Germany, Czechoslovakia, and Austria.

It was really the best of both worlds because, although we visited many countries, we got to spend six days in the home of a family from each." Kunst than spent another four weeks at the home of her mother's uncle in Radenthein, in the southern part of Austria. Asked about the most important thing she has learned as a result of her travels, Kunst said, "Czechoslovakia was the country most unlike ours. It was strange to look at the people and know that you were free, that you could leave anytime you wanted, and they could not. We listened to a radio channel from Moscow which was saying that the U.S. was using chemical warfare against Iran in the Persian Gulf. But in a way, the U.S. public is as much a victim of propaganda as is the Czech public.

That's why it's important for the people to actually see each other. Visiting other countries gives one a better perspective."

As for the future, Kunst hopes to attend either Harvard or Dartmouth because of the overseas programs these colleges offer. "The traveling I've done has made me realize that I would like to study in, and perhaps live in a foreign country — probably Australia, West Germany, or Austria. I see for myself a career in business or politics." To sum up herself, Kunst uses her now-famous saltine cracker analogy: "The texture is flaky; the way others see me. It's made of something substantial, yet the edges are still rough — and there are still little holes to be filled. That's what life is about — filling the holes."

JOURNEY TO JAPAN

"For once in my life I was a celebrity. The girls went crazy if I even nodded in their direction. I would meet lines of people waiting to shake my hand. Once I was with a bunch of little kids, and they all started to touch the hair on my legs. It was crazy. I drove a combine in a rice field. You'd think being from Kansas I'd have done something like that before; instead, I first drove one in Japan!"

This is just a small part of what senior Brogan Sullivan experienced on his AFS trip to Kochi-shi, Japan, last summer. He went with the attitude that he would make the best of every situation, so culture shock was not a big problem for him. Language was the most difficult barrier. He said, "My older brother, a freshman in college, was the only one who spoke English in the family. It was really hard to communicate the first two weeks before he came home and was able to translate. My grandfather was so cool; it didn't matter that he couldn't speak English. We would sit around watching Sumo wrestling and eating watermelon. It was great. He taught me how to harvest rice and fish in the traditional Japanese way. My father was definitely the head of the family. Whatever he said, went. One night I started to clear my plate off the table, and my dad and grandfather stopped me immediately. The women do all the housework. I didn't lift a finger at home the whole two and a half months!"

Adjusting to foreign food can be very difficult and unpleasant. Sullivan, however, was very pleased with his experience. "We ate rice for breakfast, lunch, and dinner every day I was there. It was really good though. A lot of what we ate was partially or totally raw. Sashimi was a big hunk of raw fish we would dip in some type of sauce. We ate that more often than Sushi, smaller bits of fish wrapped in rice. The raw beef I ate was actually good. It was sliced in long thin strips and was slightly cooked, but not by the standards we use. Seaweed or shellfish soup was also a common item at our meals. It was hard to pry the shellfish open with chopsticks, but I caught on pretty soon. Milk and jellyfish were the worst. The jellyfish was served as little pieces of clear, squishy meat that was really gummy and gross. I had a hard time eating that. You definitely need to like seafood to enjoy Japan."

Sullivan attended an affluent high school where the students took their studies extremely seriously. "Their main objective in life was to get into college. The pressure was so intense. Their social life is really drab until they go to college. They studied all the time. Their summer vacation was only four weeks long, and even then they took night classes to keep up. Sometimes my brother would study until two in the morning; it was just ridiculous.

"The first day I went to school was really an experience. I had to wear their little uniform with black shoes, black pants, and a white shirt. We rode our bikes for 40 minutes to get to school and parked them in the bike parking lot. Everyone in Japan rides bikes everywhere they go. Anyway, as I was walking into school, I noticed the windows were just plastered with people staring at me. To tell the truth, I was really a hit. All the girls would giggle when I came into the room, and I was sometimes called the 'one of the golden hair.' They were intrigued with my looks because I was so different and out of place. Here, we would rarely notice a Japanese exchange student, but Americans and other foreigners are rare there.

"The best part was the attention I received," joked Sullivan. "I was the star basketball player and scored fourty-two points in one of our class competition games. It was so easy to make friends over there because everyone wanted to know me. A lot of the girls asked me if I had a girlfriend and would always ask to see her picture. They all thought Lara was so beautiful — It was great. However, they were actually kind of immature. No one had boyfriends or girlfriends; that was such a big deal to them. It was like reverting to seventh grade, since the big deal was to kiss someone. The only real social life was going to an occasional movie or bowling. There weren't any parties like we have. They are much more family-oriented than we are and are more dependent upon their parents. No one wants to disgrace his parents, and not getting into college is one way to do that.

That's part of the reason they work so hard.

"Other activities are available to the Japanese who have time for entertainment. They have discos, the equivalent of our bars and night clubs, which have become very popular." Sullivan recollected, "One night I went to a disco with several American teachers. The music was mainly the same; the first song I heard when I walked in was 'Hotel California' by the Eagles. Madonna and Tom Cruise were extremely popular there. It was a bit different inside the disco, however, because the Japanese don't dance with each other. They all stood around the edge of the dance floor just watching themselves dance in the mirror. Since I had plenty of time for entertainment, I also saw Beverly Hills Cop II and Angel Hart while I was there — in English! Everything has become so Americanized it was hard to find a t-shirt or anything else with Japanese on it.

"My family took me hiking in the mountains, to see various temples and shrines, and also to Hiroshima. They left one building standing to slow the destruction of the city. The bomb had exploded directly above it and had hollowed it out as well as shattered the brick walls in many places. It was sad. They were really embarrassed about what their country stood for in World War II, and there is still a lot of propaganda about it.

"It was amazing getting to know people I had difficulty communicating with. Although they were shy, they were very friendly and easy to be with. They made me feel so welcome. They had a big party for me when I came and before I left. They really did make me feel like a celebrity, and I loved it!"

BEHIND THE SCENES WITH PORTER

Lights, camera, action ... and take one. Center stage is senior Mike Porter, who only two years ago remarked, "Everyone has his own special talent, but I haven't found mine yet." Now it appears he is stealing the show.

Porter immersed himself in theater his sophomore year and has not come up for air since. Porter said, "When I started getting good parts in East productions, it really gave me a boost." He has had roles in The Music Man, Little Mary Sunshine. A Midsummer Night's Dream, The Miracle Worker, and My Fair Lady. to name a few.

But Porter's interest and commitment did not stop with school productions. Over the summer he acted in My Fair Lady and Anything Goes for Theater in the Park. Porter also worked with the Channel Nine players for "Nine Against Drugs," performing anti-drug skits for young people in the community. This included appearing in commercials and a television show aired during the spring.

What makes this actor stand out from others, though, is his unique ability to land and perfect not-so-typical roles. Porter said, "I like character roles. These aren't typical 'leading men,' and through these characters, I get a lot of laughs."

Anyone who knows Porter will readily agree that he attracts attention with his entertaining nature and amusing sense of humor, so it comes as no surprise that Porter most admires comedian Dick Van Dyke. Porter's favorite musical — again no surprise — is the humorous and lighthearted Mary Poppins.

Porter devotes much of his time to "trying." "I work some at home on memorizing lines, but I work harder on forming some sort of character that is believable," said Porter.

The mere thought of performing in front of the dark sea of faces in the SM East auditorium is sure to get the adrenaline flowing. Porter agreed, "Of course I have stage fright; everyone does. But it is actually good because I can channel that nervous energy into being energetic on stage."

Unless Porter gets what he calls a "big break," he will minor in drama (theater) in college and major in communications (radio and/or television production). "It's pretty risky business. Let's just put it this way: I don't want to be a starving artist," concluded Porter.

END OF AN ERA

Imagine living through the many experiences of growing up, positive as well as negative, with someone else, someone who has the same background and is affected in a similar fashion. Now consider the possibility of that person no longer being there. This is an idea that senior twins have come to accept as they look to graduation and college.

Both good and bad come from being a twin. Twins give each other support and courage to do things they would not do alone. Monique Cox explained, "We use each other as a crutch, especially in things like meeting new friends." A twin often serves as an ally against parents or peers. Laughing, Emily Sawyer remembered, "We would gang up on Amy (their older sister) when we were little." However, twin stereotypes can be annoying at times. "We're not the same person," Sawyer continued. Tom Sullivan has not experienced the clone syndrome: "One of the best things about being fraternal twins is that we don't look alike, so nobody knows we're twins, and people don't expect us to be the same."

After seventeen or eighteen years a special bond develops between twins. Brian Cox explained, "Sometimes I feel what he (Karl) feels. I guess I can read him more than if we were just brothers." Sullivan denied any such bond: "David and I are just like brothers. There's no super love relationship." Describing her relationship with Nicole, Monique Cox said, "The last couple of years we've been closer than ever." Thinking of the future, she continued, "Now we're afraid we'll never be this close again."

With the end of the school year comes the end of an era as twins go on to different schools. Sawyer awaited the change with a positive attitude: "It will be nice to start again on our own. We've always been together; now we have all the same friends and everything." Apprehensive about his future plans, Karl Cox said, "It's more the scariness of knowing that he (Brian) is not going to be there than the idea that I'm getting away from him." Nicole Cox had mixed emotions on the separation: "I want to be independent, to go out on my own, but it's going to be hard." She explained, "When we come home we talk everything out. It will be weird to be somewhere that you don't have someone like that."

Whatever their future plans may be, senior twins seem to agree that going their separate ways is the right thing to do. Nicole Cox summed up the general feelings: "It will be a challenge to be on your own, but we have to eventually, and this is a good time to do it."

MEMORIES = sunsets, sunrises, seasons, Alissas' smiles, storms, moms scorns, nightly summer breeze, steamy breath in cold air, a blossoming flower, laughter from children, the clean smell after a spring rain, shadows at night, full moons, falling leaves, splashing water, a train in the distance, whispers, kisses, music, tears, raindrops, colors, sky, clouds ... it could go on. These things I will remember and keep experiencing until...

READY FOR THE WORLD

One day I threw away my crayons & coloring book!
It was time for me, I decided to give life a look.
So out I went filled with hopes to find
The peaceful world I had in mind
I saw the people just letting life run on past

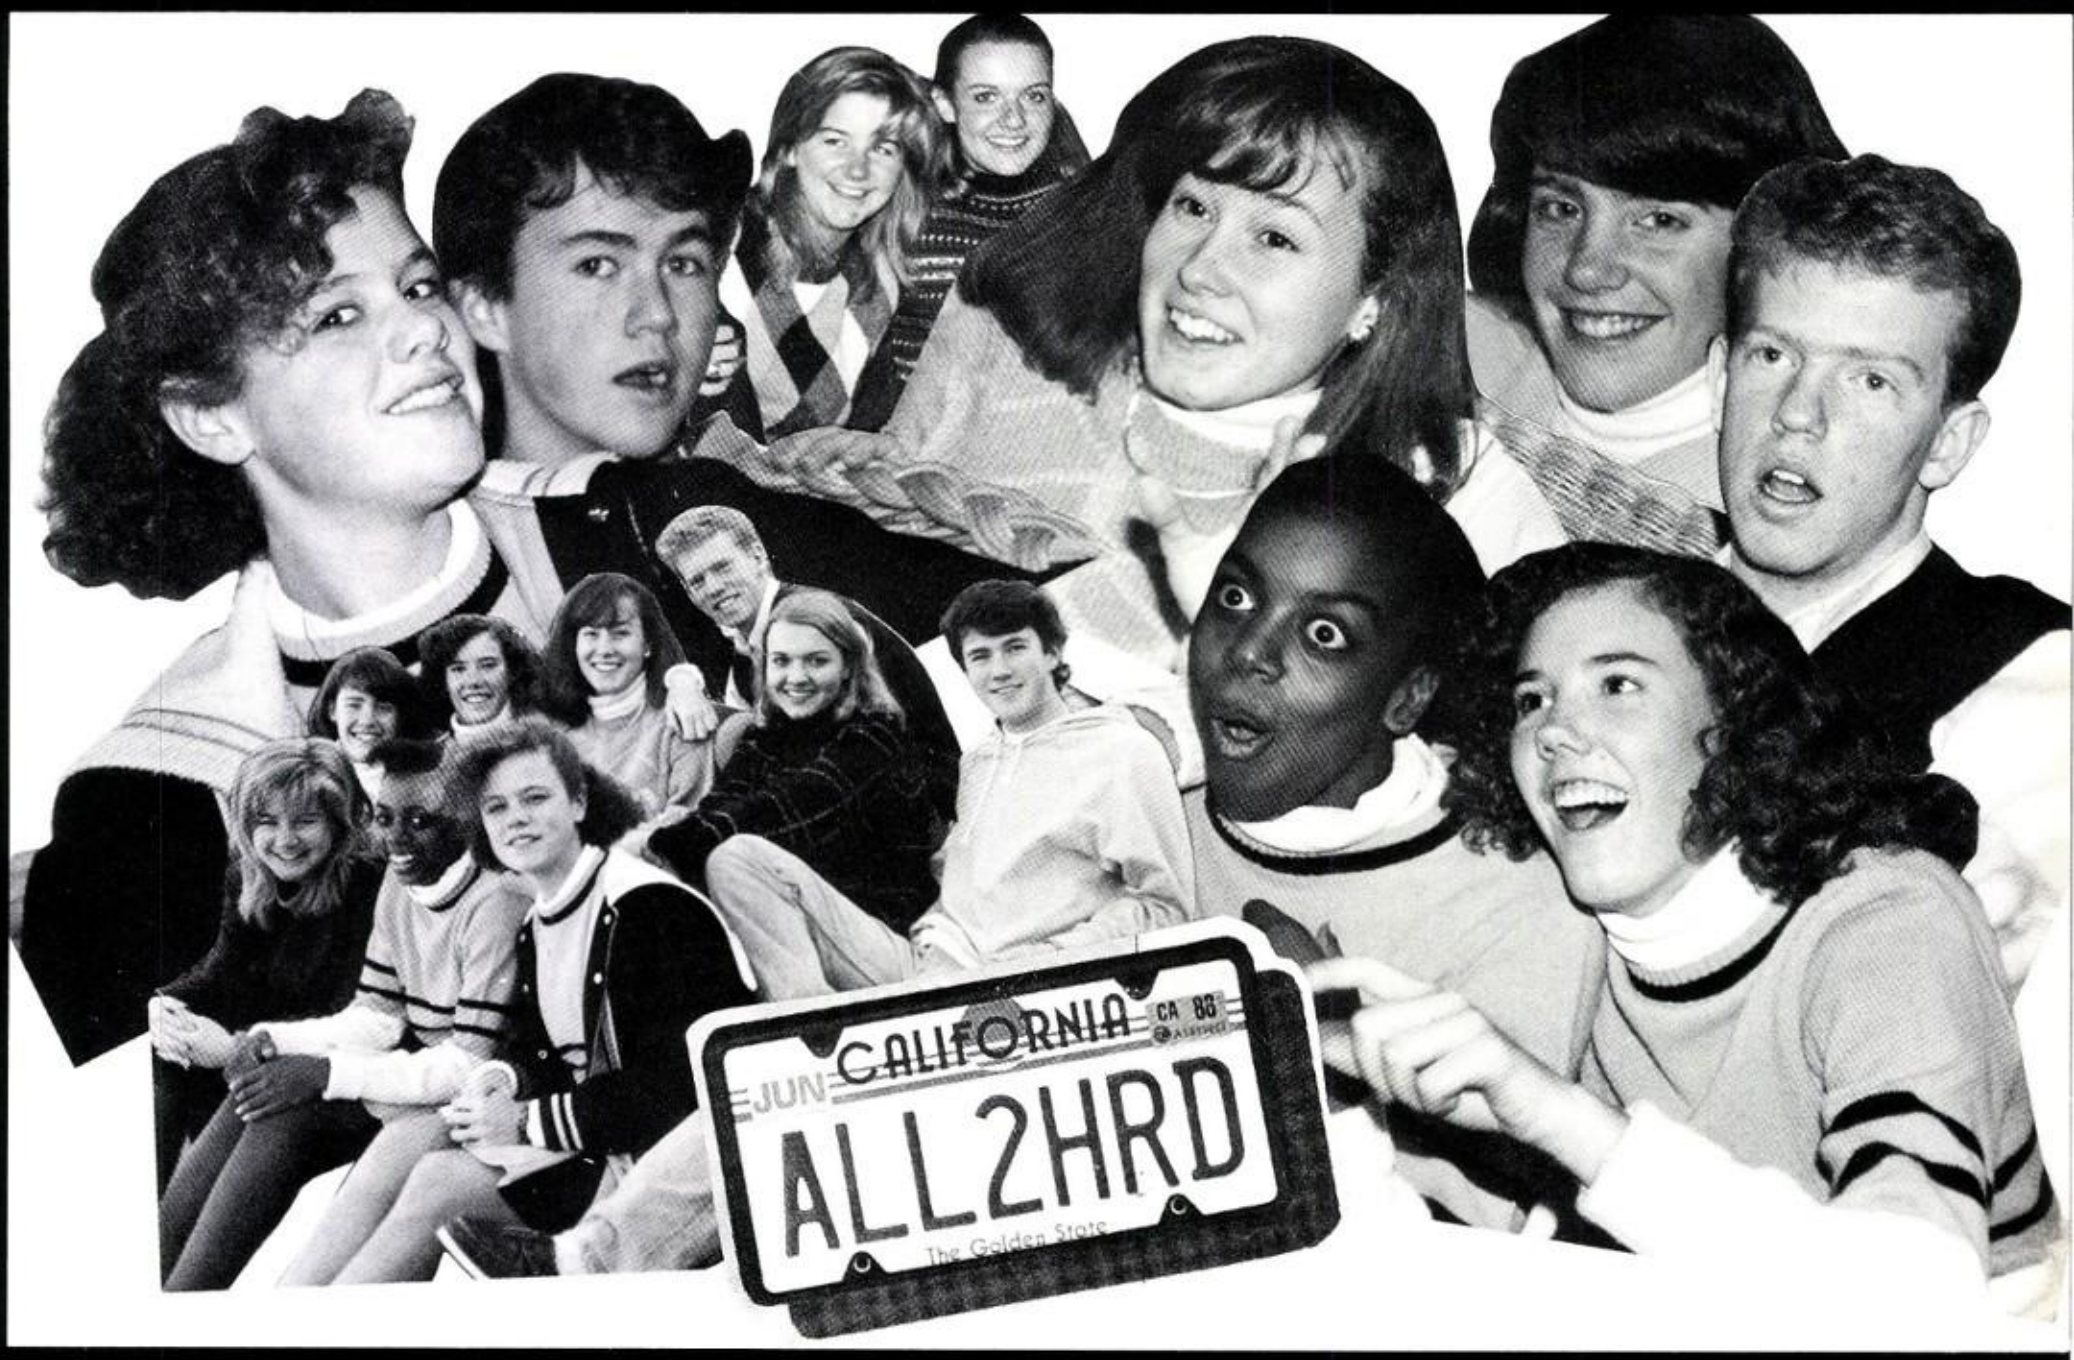
I began to wonder if I tried to grow up too fast
I searched for a world like the ones I drew
But what I found was nothing like I once knew
Sneaking back to my room, I realized
As I hugged my doll and closed my eyes
I'm in no hurry to face life's schemes
And I drifted off to my world of dreams.

We know what's HAPPENING!



from four years old to forever...

Nothing will I fear
As long as you are near
Please be near me to

Your love for me,
and yet
My heart forever is

Jesus be my guide and hold me to your

THROUGH THE PHOTOGRAPHER'S EYE

All art, regardless of medium, is an extension of the artist's spirit. By sharing his work, the artist allows the viewer an opportunity to draw from it a meaning relevant to his own life. Life is a collection of images and concepts. What we perceive and how we exist is a result of the images with which we structure the world around us. A single image captures more than the objects at a particular location and a particular time. It captures more than the action that occurred. Pictures serve as more than physical records or reminders of occurrances and people. Pictures capture the souls of their subjects on paper although each person perceives that spirit in his own way.

COLOPHON

The thirtieth volume of the Hauberk was published by Jostens Printing and Publishing Company in Topeka, Kansas.

The cover is Basin Street Blue No. 517 with silkscreen applications of Gray No. 356 and White No. 325 and was designed by Stephanie Sawyer and Jennie Cowden. The endsheets are Stainless Steel No. 289 with ink applications of Black No. 395 and Navy No. 540. The endsheets, title page, division pages and all graphics were designed by Holly Smith and Patty Bliss.

The cover and title page are printed in Garamond, Style 17 and Garamond Bold, Style 18. The majority of headlines and body copy are Times Roman, Style 45. Captions are Times Roman Bold, Style 46, and bylines are Times Roman Italics, Style 45i. Color screens of 10, 30, and 60 percent blue were used in the Student Life section, and Color screens of 10, 30, 60 and 100 percent black were used used throughout the book.

All black and white photographs were taken, developed, and printed by staff photographers. DeCloud Studios provided senior portraits. Sports and activity group pictures were taken by J.Q. Adams.

The Hauberk was distributed to students on May 20, 1988. Two thousand copies were printed. Students were charged $18.00 for each book, including sales tax. The Hauberk was created in room 135 at Shawnee Mission East High School, 7500 Mission Road, Shawnee Mission, Kansas, 66208, under the supervision of adviser Donna Skates, and with the advice of Jostens representative Ed Villwock.

I would like to thank Patty Bliss, Laura Sinclair, Darren Kennedy, and our adviser, Donna Skates, for the time they devoted to the production of this book. Seniors: we've shared something very special with each other — growing up. Each of us has memories of the others which will bind us together no matter how far apart the course of our lives may take us. It is my wish, and that of the staff, that this book will help you keep these memories close at hand. Good luck to each of you and many good things for the future.
